BEST INTENT

I'LL KEEP THIS LETTER SHORT AND sweet, because I don't want to delay you from diving into our Boston's Best lineup, jam-packed with new additions and old favorites, hot spots and hidden gems, boldfaced names and unsung talents. We've got all the essentials—like Best Burger (p. 61)—but plenty of unexpected categories too, from the Best Place to Drink Alone (p. 98) to the Best Reason to Dabble in the Occult (p. 140). There are lots of unique finds we think will delight you, like a shop where you can 3-D print your own blazer (p. 124) and a local ensemble that lets some lucky listeners sit smack dab in the middle of the musicians (p. 108). And we have picks that may surprise you, say, a Best Italian eatery (p. 72) in Brookline, not the North End, or a Best Manicure (p. 118) in Southie, not on Newbury Street. One thing that's not the least bit surprising? How funny our cover subject Mindy Kaling is. Catch up with the multitalented Cambridge native on p. 54. Happy reading.

HAPPY CAMPER

CULTURE AND COMMERCE MEET IN AN INCUBATOR ON WHEELS.

ROAD WARRIOR: The Mobile Incubator's interior showcases the talents of artists and artisans like Seattle's Kate Jessop, who designed the mosaic table below.

A Van with a Business Plan

This month, Lucas Spivey will be rolling out AstroTurf, plunking down plastic flamingos and lawn chairs, and parking his 1957 Shasta camper in front of the Boston Center for the Arts for a three-month stay. It sounds like a leisurely summer scene—but Spivey means business. "I'm entertaining folks, but I'm also secretly educating them about business obstacles and ways to overcome them," says Spivey, a consultant who's worked with artists and cultural organizations across the country. "I started to notice the same problems, no matter what industry—artists, musicians, performers, comedians, designers, architects, they were all having similar problems."

In response, Spivey revved up his Mobile Incubator, a roving office and recording studio where he's sharing business development strategies and documenting artists' successes and struggles. The camper crisscrossed the country visiting maker spaces, business parks, universities and other incubators on its inaugural 15,000-mile road trip in 2016; now Spivey is preparing to park in Boston from July 20 through Oct. 22 for the latest installment of the Boston Center for the Arts' Public Arts Residency. On Tuesdays and Thursdays, he'll offer pro bono consultations to creative professionals, who, he notes, often face challenges in securing financing, marketing themselves and defending their intellectual property. Take Alice Saunders of Somerville line Forestbound, who recently discovered that Forever 21 was selling a bag highly reminiscent of her design.

"You look at the two bags and you're like, 'This is not fair use. This is pretty shocking,' " says Spivey, who's featuring Saunders as a guest for one of the podcast episodes he'll produce in the Mobile Incubator during the residency. Other local artists and entrepreneurs he's tapping include Project Runway winner Erin Robertson, the steady-handed painters behind Best Dressed Signs, film location scout Ryan Cook, pop-up and public-art impresario Emily Isenberg and comedians Alingon Mitra and Jenny Zigrino. But the Mobile Incubator isn't simply a recording studio and office on wheels—Spivey thinks of it as a work of art in its own right.

"There's a very particular reason I picked this model," he explains. "People copied it for 40 years it was so iconic. It's a beautiful work of industrial design." Now adorned with mosaic walls made from more than 1,000 wooden pieces, the camper was retrofitted by Mighty Tieton, an artisan business incubator nestled in the Cascade Mountains. "It's filled with dozens of artists, designers, production companies, a book bindery, printing shops," Spivey says. "They have folks with marketing expertise, folks with accounting and legal backgrounds, fulfillment services. They've got all the nuts and bolts of what a business community needs in a town of 1,200 people." It's the sort of case study in culture and commerce that he hopes can help make the term "starving artist" a misnomer. / Jacqueline Houton

HUNAN TOUCH

A CHINESE-BORN RESEARCH SCIENTIST'S NEW EATERY MINES THE FLAVORS OF HER YOUTH.

SUMIAO HUNAN KITCHEN
270 Third St., Cambridge
(857-529-7778) sumiaohunan.com

WHENEVER RESTAURATEUR Sumiao Chen meets a fellow transplant from China, she's asked where she's from. When she says "Hunan," the reply is often "Oh, spicy girl." But Chen's experience with the province's food was anything but one-note, and she's aiming to expose diners to different sides of Hunan cuisine at her eponymous restaurant, Sumiao Hunan Kitchen, slated to open in Kendall Square in July.

"When I was growing up in my hometown, the food was even more healthy with more vegetables. The Hunan region is surrounded by mountains," Chen says. "There were lots of different fresh herbs from the gardens. Forty percent of the rice in China is produced there. There's lots of rice in the mountains."

After experimenting with more than 300 dishes, Chen settled on a menu of Hunan classics that range from spicy to mild as well as a few Chinese-American favorites for the less adventurous. The dinner menu will include sections for soups, vegetables, proteins and grains. A menu of small plates, available all day, will feature items steamed, grilled or served cold. The lunch menu will cater to a quick-service crowd, offering eight different toppings, such as tomato and scrambled eggs or curry chicken, over the customer's choice of rice (black, brown, white or mixed grains). There will also be eight types of toppings available over three types of pancakes.

"I'm a scientist, so developing the menu is kind of a research project for me," says Chen, who's opened nearly a dozen restaurants in Massachusetts in the past two decades while working full-time as a project manager and researcher for a pharmaceutical company. "We eliminated a lot of dishes that were too authentic because we didn't have ingredients available locally that we need to make it. We also got rid of dishes that weren't healthy and had too high a calorie count."

There are blue, yellow and magenta chairs throughout Sumiao, which Chen hopes mixes Kendall Square's familiar industrial-chic look with a few elements from Hunan. The 168-seat, L-shaped interior has nearly as many varied sections as the menu. On the left side is a conference-dining area with low-top tables and a screen available for business meetings. That area leads to a 24-seat high-top communal table shaped to evoke a dragon. On the right side of the space, an open kitchen where the small plates will be cooked overlooks a 45-seat seasonal patio, and a metal curtain closes off a nearby private dining room. In the middle of the restaurant, a mix of low-top tables are scattered through the dining room, which is bookended by a bar on one side and a fireplace on the other. The bar, helmed by Paul Lamprey, will offer traditional Asian drinks with a twist, sake cocktails like a Ginger Saketini and an in-depth sake program.

"People think Chinese restaurants never have a good bar," Chen says. "I want to change this interpretation. Chinese food is very good to pair with it."

It's just another stereotype Chen hopes to counter. She credits the late Chairman Mao Tse-tung, who was born in her hometown, for spreading the notion that all Hunan food is spicy. "He loved very, very spicy food. He had the very famous sentence, saying: 'If you don't eat spicy food, you're not a revolutionary.'" Chen says. "And then people thought Hunan food was very spicy. It's not. Eighty percent of Hunan food is not spicy."

THAT'S NUTS: The cafe's sweet toast comes topped with toasted almonds.

Good Eats: Toast of the Town

"I'm more of a savory person myself," says David "Woody" Wood, general manager of NOCA Provisions, a new sibling of the Table at Season to Taste that opened last month in North Cambridge. But he's still a fan of the cafe's sweet toast, which features a fresh chèvre spread topped with toasted almonds and a seasonal jam—currently housemade peach compote. Options for the bread, all of which are baked daily at nearby Season to Taste, include a country sourdough and a popover, but Wood recommends the heritage multigrain bread made with bolted whole wheat and red fife flour. "It pairs well with the multigrain because the multigrain has a little bit of honey in it," he says. Sweet. / Meghan Kavanaugh

PICKING PINOT

Earlier this year I was one of three judges at the Pinot Cup, a blind tasting of pinot noirs held at Charlie Palmer's Dry Creek Kitchen in Sonoma, California. Quality, as expected, was high across the board, but what's remarkable about tasting more than 60 pinots at one sitting is the degree to which each is distinctive, their nuances easier to differentiate than if you were tasting multiples of any other noble grape variety with the possible exception of riesling. Our two main sources are California and Oregon. I look to the former if I'm more in the mood for flavor fireworks and pure pinot sensuality, while the latter is where I expect to experience bass notes of precision and purity. The following three are outstanding. / Sondy Block

SIDURI PINOT NOIR, RUSSIAN RIVER VALLEY, 2015

The Russian River is one of my go-to California regions—along with Anderson Valley and Sta. Rita Hills—for the kind of juicy, silky, cherry-like pinot that is hard to resist. This wine features an engaging floral-scented aroma and uncommonly smooth, ripe red fruit flavors, balanced with smokiness and firm acids. Grace notes include cinnamon, cigar box and spearmint. This is a beautiful accompaniment for grilled salmon with a honey mustard glaze.

$35, Liquor Land, Boston

PONZI CLASSICO PINOT NOIR, WILLAMETTE VALLEY, 2014

One of the pioneers of the Oregon wine industry, the Ponzi family produces wines that are a quality benchmark. Lightly spicy, soft and pure with a gentle touch of earthiness and approachable red berry fruit, this is a fresh, open-hearted pinot noir that I recently enjoyed with a roasted bass with morels and a strawberry jus. Low in tannin, its elegant red fruit flavors are bright and lingering.

$34, Brookline Fine Wine & Spirits

REX HILL PINOT NOIR, WILLAMETTE VALLEY, 2014

This is a broader-textured pinot with more ripe, velvety intensity than you might ordinarily expect from Oregon, perhaps due to the Goldilocks nature of the vintage: It's not too hot, not too cold, not too wet, just right! The aroma and flavor profile are classic: dark cherry, forest floor, red licorice, mineral and mushroom. A supple and stylish wine that also shows some milk chocolate notes, it's delicious with a peppery grilled tuna steak.

$30, Gordon's Fine Wines & Liquors, Wolthom

MOB SCENE: Marc Smerling will share bonus material and take questions at Crimetown Live

Q&A

PARTNER IN CRIME

Hot off the success of HBO's The Jinx, Oscar-nominated documentarian Marc Smerling gave us an earful with Crimetown, a podcast about crime and corruption in Providence. We chatted with Smerling before he and co-host Zac Stuart-Pontier bring a live show—complete with special guests, musical performances and archival footage—to the Wilbur Theatre on July 15. / Meghon Kovonough

WHAT DREW YOU TO PROVIDENCE? I had a wonderful introduction to the city. I had met a girl in college, who I ended up marrying. She was Italian and from Smith Hill, so I got to become part of this big Italian family. ... It's the kind of place where everybody knows everybody or they're related to everybody, so when I used to go out with my father-in-law, I'd meet these really interesting characters on Federal Hill, but I also met Buddy [Vincent "Buddy" Cianci, convicted felon and the city's longest-serving mayor]. I always understood there was something different about Providence, that this sort of two-degrees-of-separation had an incredible effect of making everybody so close that forgiveness was a big part of the landscape there. There are these dysfunctional relationships like all families have, and Providence is one huge family.

CAPTURING THE FRIEDMANS, THE JINX, CATFISH*—YOU FEATURE SUCH COMPELLING STORIES. WHAT DO YOU LOOK FOR IN SUBJECTS? You're looking for people who are extreme versions of what we all go through every day, who are making choices that are much more extreme than ours, but, ultimately, they illustrate a bigger sort of connection to humanity. Angela, the woman in Catfish, is lonely. She's burdened by her life, and she does something extreme. . . You know she's doing something wrong, but ultimately it's hard to blame her for it. And Buddy [Cianci]—he's a very similar character in that way.

ANY HINTS ABOUT SEASON 2? We've been looking at cities. One city that I think is rising is Detroit. It's got its own culture there that I think is interesting, it's got its own music there that I think is interesting, its own heart. I have a fantasy, maybe not next season, but a season that's more of a small-town story. The requirement is that whatever the crime is, it affected the fabric of the people who live in that city.

Drink Pink

When summer's supply of rosé runs dry, these plan B's are just as pretty to look at—and pack an even stronger punch. / Sarah Hagman

Whether Babbo guests are looking to get the night started or cap it off, general manager Carl McCoy suggests the Santa Rosella, a lightly smoky option that brings the sweet and the heat with its rim of sugar, fennel seed, coriander and pink peppercorn. Inside the absinthe-washed glass, there's mezcal, St.-Germain, lime juice and Contratto Bitter, a Campari-like grape brandy-based liqueur that gets its color from beets.

Loco bar manager Kaitlyn Fischer describes this refreshing sip of tequila, watermelon puree and muddled blueberries and mint as "sneaky." As to why it's named The Britney, Fischer—who admits to seeing the pop star in concert four times—says that if you hit this baby one too many times, "You may go crazy, shave your head and end up in one of those infamous pictures you regret for life."

When tinkering with the summer menu, Lion's Tail co-owner and beverage director Jarek Mountain tracked down Italicus, which until recently wasn't available locally. For the Soul to Squeeze, the bergamot-flavored liqueur is combined with equal parts gin and a housemade raspberry cordial and then topped with a bouquet of mint leaves sprinkled with powdered sugar. It all makes for a "ridiculously good-looking" drink that Mountain dubs a #patiopounder.

The inspiration for Les Sablons' Pigeon French, a "complex yet light aperitif-style cocktail," got its start at sister spot the Hawthorne, where beverage director Jackson Cannon says the staff "consider the pigeon to be one of our spirit animals." This reworked version balances Giffard Banane du Brésil liqueur, fresh lemon juice and orgeat with a touch of bitterness from cognac and strawberry Campari—a combination that's quickly made it the new eatery's top-selling cocktail.

YOUR HIGHNESS: The Queen will be joined by other [illegible]

WAX POETIC

You won't have to worry about minding your manners when making the acquaintance of the Queen upon her arrival in Boston this summer. In fact, you can walk right up and take a selfie with her. The royal matriarch is one of many celebrities, world leaders, athletes and other notables who will be on view at Dreamland Wax Museum, opening on the edge of City Hall Plaza in late July. The museum is the first U.S. location for Dreams Entertainment Group, which operates more than 30 museums around the world and chose Boston as the site for its North American flagship because of the local emphasis on education and history—two things we've got in spades. The museum will display a variety of historical figures, including every U.S. president and world leaders like Nelson Mandela, as well as religious icons like Pope Francis and Mother Teresa in a designated Vatican room. There will also be a sports hall dedicated largely to Boston teams (with figures like Celtics legend Paul Pierce), a nook where you can have tea with Audrey Hepburn and a studio where you can be a "guest" on Oprah's show. And visitors are welcome to get cozy with everyone. "Unlike other wax museums, where you can't really touch the figures, here we're going to let you," says vice president of sales Michael Pelletz. "You can take selfies, put your arm around them. We want them to be fun and interactive." There will be plenty of Instagram ops with local celebs' figures too: Pelletz says they'll be hosting model sittings with yet-to-be-announced boldfaced Boston names (though you can likely guess a few), and the plan is to unveil three new local figures a year, complete with opening parties in the museum. As for posing with the stand-in for our current prez? "Whatever you want to do," Pelletz laughs. "We'll leave it at that." / Alexandra Cavallo

BEST UNDRESSED

A LOCALLY SET COMING-OF-AGE MEMOIR CHRONICLES A BOY'S UNLIKELY BOND WITH A PLAYGIRL CENTERFOLD.

Man of the Year* by Lou Cove
Published by Flatiron Books, 320 pages, $27

LOU COVE'S EBULLIENT MEMOIR, A Salem-set account of his eventful 13th year and its aftermath, is full of outrageous elements—such as his time serving as a campaign manager for family friend Howie, an aspiring actor and nude model for Playgirl (Mr. November 1978, in fact), in his quest to become the magazine's Man of the Year. And wait! On the very first night of Howie and his wife Carly's extended stay in the Cove household, he shows the whole clan Kodachrome slides of their San Francisco wedding, which had both bride and groom exchanging vows in the nude. Another slide depicts a sex act still mysterious to young Lou.

But hey, it's the '70s, and the Coves mostly accept Howie's free-loving, freewheeling ways, partly because Carly adds such warmth to the scene. She runs discussion groups for women, who share concerns from their sex lives, including the pain that the swingin' life can bring to a spouse. And the good-natured Howie, all groovy talk and affectionate nicknames, brings cheer and comfort to Lou, who's trying to find his place in a new town and experiencing normal adolescent attractions and loneliness. But larger troubles loom: Lou's parents become disconnected and then divorce, saddening our lively lad and darkening his view of his dad, whom he'd idolized. But Howie helps him understand his father better, another lesson in the unusual education we watch unfold.

The colorful characters remain in Lou's life, as he explains in an affectionate update. Carly, who became a therapist, is still married to Howie, who became an adult film star in the early '80s. He's a grandfather now—and fully clothed.

FROM PAGE 170: Howie and I have not just hit on a path to victory, but the jackpot for being smothered in love gravy. It's a bonanza of affection that satisfies so many needs. But the warm glow of any success proves challenging to sustain in the midst of a Salem winter. The bricks freeze, the streets empty, and the natives get restless. ◆

YE OLDE MODERNE

NORTH SQUARE OYSTER STRADDLES SEAFOOD STANDBYS AND MORE MODERN CONCEITS

BOSTON'S RESTAURANT BOOM OF THE past few years has witnessed the arrival of scores of shiny new dining locales in the Seaport, the Fenway, old residential Southie and the once-undeveloped margins of the South End. Even that most reliably stolid tourist destination, the North End, appears to be responding to a relentless hunger for the new. Where Neptune Oyster long stood out as a lone purveyor of New England seafood amid a sea of Italian-American red-sauce joints, the picturesque old neighborhood now features a handful of spots to get raw oysters, fried clams and lobster rolls. North Square Oyster is the latest to jump on this bandwagon, and onboard is executive chef Douglas Rodrigues, who brings his days as executive chef at Clio into occasional, surprising focus here.

If you open in 2017 with "Oyster" in your name, you'd better get raw bar right, and North Square does not fall down, serving 12 varieties nightly ($2.50-$3.50 apiece), mostly from Massachusetts and Maine harbors, with occasional imports from Virginia and Washington State. It's great fun to order an assortment and recognize how much "merroir" (hyper-local variations in the beasties' diets and environs) affects their flavor. Dotting them with any of six complimentary housemade sauces adds further intrigue (we loved the three mignonettes, especially the angelica-spiked one). Rodrigues also tarts up his oysters in gorgeous avant-garde drag in the form of composed oysters ($5-$6 apiece), with delicately laid-on adornments like watermelon pearls, rosé and crème fraîche (modestly sweet and tangy) or hibiscus-infused ponzu sauce with a cherry-cured quail-egg yolk (more assertively umami-rich but still letting some oyster whiff shine through). Start with naked oysters, progress to dabbing on some sauces, end on composed: oyster-eating from the primitive to the molecular-gastronomic on one plate.

As the tourist imperative must be served, there are very fine versions of a lobster roll ($29, cold or hot—the brown-butter-drenched hot is superior) and a double-patty bacon cheeseburger ($16), both served with excellent fries. We eye rolled hard at clam chowder boule ($11)—how touristy can touristy get?—but an outstanding bread bowl made of kombucha sourdough, crisp vegetables, plenty of clams and an only slightly thickened broth added up to surprising satisfaction. Our higher expectations for seafood stew ($35) were dashed by a badly overcooked bevy of mussels, littlenecks, shrimp, salmon and cod: such a shame to dry out and rubberize all that beautiful seafood, especially at that price. It's also striking when this chef misses the modernist mark, as in a sea urchin crudo ($16) in which the unpleasantly weird sweetness of Asian-style quick-pickled white asparagus and plum sauce clashed against the uni's briny richness.

But then Rodrigues executes a coup like his lobster-and-oxtail Bolognese ($18/half, $30/whole) over rigatoni, a staggeringly delicious, luxurious ragu dotted with parsnips and ricotta, the half-portion generous and rich enough for several to share as a mid-course. Then he has us shaking our heads in wonderment at a plate of fish & chips ($21)—fish & chips!—as it might be the best rendition of this humble pub standby we've ever had: a meaty cod filet with a subtle, thin, tempura-crisp batter, perfectly fried and served with subtly juniper-accented tartar sauce and more of those good fries. This menu may be uneven and wander into some unexpected corners, but when it hits, it thunders.

Desserts (all $7) are decent if not ravishing—spice-cake-like Depression cake makes the best use ever of Dunks hazelnut coffee by using it to flavor the accompanying ice cream, and the chiffon cake is a tasty if sloppy jumble of almond chiffon cake chunks, good fruit and strawberry sorbet—but all would be improved by more attractive vessels than their homely dark bowls. Virtues include some very well-executed cocktails (the beverage director and general manager hails from owner Nick Frattaroli's other North End spot, Ward 8, which has the other best drinks in the neighborhood) and a wine list that resists the usual North End restaurateur's urge to gouge on price. We enjoyed the bracingly oyster-friendly 2015 Sauvion muscadet (a solid $51) and the fizzy, refreshing 2015 Txomin Etxaniz txakoli (very nice at $52). The ambiance is tough to beat, too, in a two-story space that charmingly evokes the 19th century. Most tables look out on breathtakingly scenic North Square, a cobblestoned panorama of 400-plus years of Boston history, though pressed-tin ceilings can make things a bit shouty at prime time. Service is typical for the neighborhood, prizing personality over polished service chops, though even the most charming staffer cannot cover for the long pauses between courses that the kitchen produced on several visits.

Longtime locals are correct to be wary of the North End: Too many of its venues are too happy to fleece visitors who will never return, and there are too many better, more traditional Italian restaurants all over town these days. But North Square Oyster is too earnest, too delicious and too good a value when it hits its marks to be deemed a tourist trap. The trick for Bostonians will be to triangulate what this kitchen, with its ungainly mix of trite but de rigueur classics and ambitiously modern seafood dishes, does best, as beyond raw bar, it can be the opposite of what you might expect. ◆

SPRING TO ACTION

HIGHLIGHTS FROM HIGH SOCIETY

→ On June 8, Cardinal Cushing Centers celebrated its 70th anniversary with its Springtime gala at the Seaport Hotel. Honoring former BNY Mellon exec Joanne Jaxtimer and the Sisters of St. Francis of Assisi, the evening included a fashion show pairing Boston business leaders with children aided by the charity. The 420 guests raised $430,000 to support the classes and job training the centers provide to children and adults with intellectual disabilities.

→ Tom Brady is also an MVP at the Ellie Fund. The charity, which provides support services to breast cancer patients in treatment, welcomed the surprise guest at its 5 for Ellie gala, held on June 7 at the Fairmont Copley Plaza. Brady raised $120,000 through autographed jerseys and footballs tossed from the runway, where WCVB-TV (Ch. 5) newswomen modeled Alice + Olivia fashions. In total, more than 350 guests raised nearly $250,000.

ASK CHERYL

Q: I HAVE SOFT FAT IN MY TUMMY AND LOVE HANDLES, WHICH I HATE. PLEASE TELL ME ABOUT THE NEW FAT FREEZING PROCEDURE I'VE BEEN READING ABOUT.

A: CoolSculpting is a very effective non-invasive body contouring treatment. The procedure freezes unwanted fat, killing off fat cells which are then naturally eliminated from your body. No needles, no surgery, and no downtime. It is safe and effective.

Many of us have problem areas, such as our abdomen, love handles, back fat or saddlebags. CoolSculpting uses controlled cooling to target, freeze and kill fat cells; only the fat cells are affected. After treatment, our body gradually removes the "dead" fat cells, resulting in up to a 25% reduction of the fat in the treated area. Results are visible within six weeks of treatment and the final results are seen after three months.

At SkinHealth, our clients have seen remarkable results with CoolSculpting!

WAR FOR THE PLANET OF THE APES ★★★½
Starring Andy Serkis, Steve Zahn, Judy Greer, Devyn Dalton, Amiah Miller, Ty Olsson, Terry Notary, Karin Konoval, Michael Adamthwaite, Gabriel Chavarria, Aleks Paunovic, Max Lloyd-Jones, Toby Kebbell and Woody Harrelson. Written by Mark Bomback and Matt Reeves, based on characters created by Rick Jaffa and Amanda Silver. Directed by Reeves. At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

APE-POCALYPSE NOW

THE FATE OF A PLANET HANGS IN THE BALANCE AS MAN AND APE GO TO WAR.

Matt Reeves' latest film opens on a band of human survivors, a team of heavily armed military men and women who are methodically combing through California's Muir Woods in search of Caesar, the chimpanzee leader of the increasingly dominant apes who gained intelligence during the "Simian Flu" outbreak that decimated much of Earth's human population at the end of Rupert Wyatt's 2011 prequel/reboot, Rise of the Planet of the Apes. But once these soldiers encounter, engage and are overrun by a group of apes on horseback, writer/director Reeves and co-writer Mark Bomback quickly switch their point of view.

In War for the Planet of the Apes, the third and finest part of an increasingly successful and fascinating film trilogy (coming after Reeves' 2014 installment, Dawn of the Planet of the Apes), Reeves and Bomback have made the bold choice to leave the human protagonists behind entirely. It's an inspired move that pays off in spades, since Caesar (once again masterfully portrayed by Andy Serkis in another award-worthy motion-capture performance) has become a far more compelling character than the Homo sapiens played by James Franco in the first film and Jason Clarke in the second. Serkis' performance has taken on real emotional dimension, underlined by the frequent close-ups that Reeves employs as he hovers on Caesar's anguished face (brought to life by visual effects supervisors Dan Lemmon and Joe Letteri, veterans of both the Apes films and James Cameron's Avatar).

It's clear that Reeves (who also helmed 2008's Cloverfield and 2010's Let Me In) has studied up on the Westerns of Sergio Leone, films like The Good, the Bad and the Ugly, since he loves getting in tight on Caesar's eyes, much like Leone did on Clint Eastwood's. Of course, this technique wouldn't work if not for the stellar contributions of the animators who translate Serkis' mo-cap performance into the most realistic digital character to date—and there are almost a dozen more like him, including Caesar's right-hand simian, Rocket (mo-cap by Terry Notary, who recently performed as the titular ape in Kong: Skull Island), and his trusted orangutan advisor, Maurice (Karin Konoval), both of whom have stood by him in all three films.

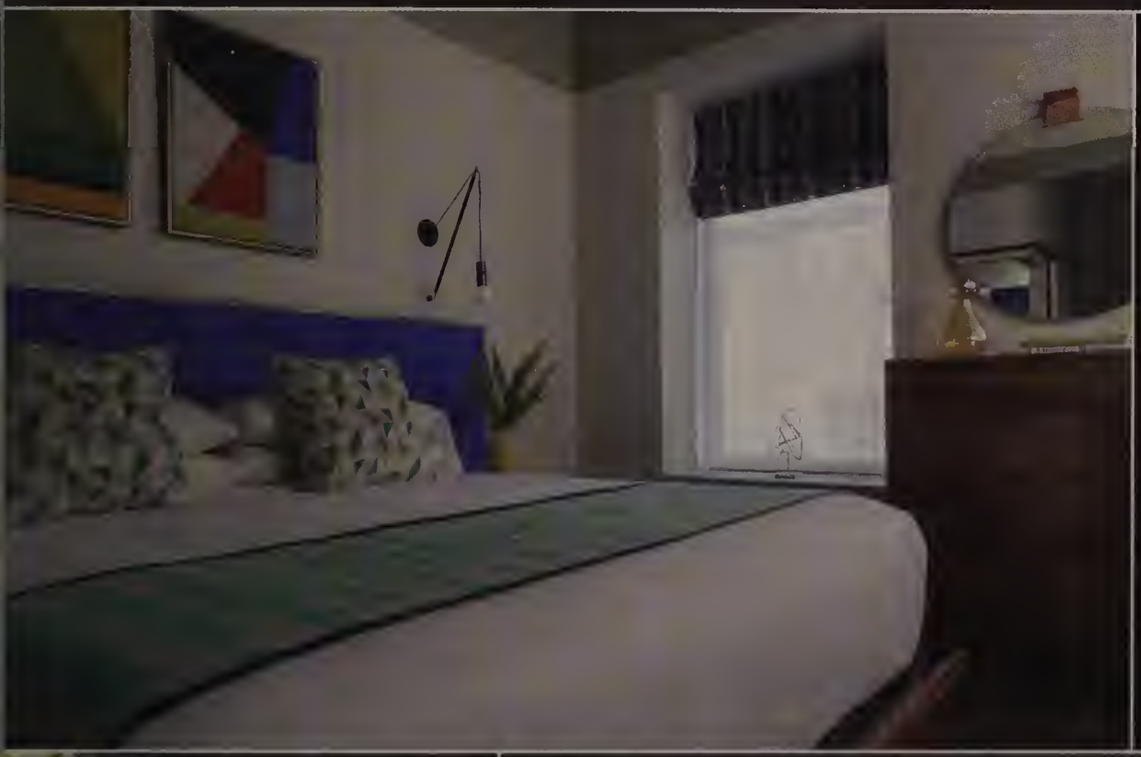
The Western influence is felt in other ways, and it's not just the films of Leone that Reeves, um, apes. After Caesar's scouts are ambushed by the soldiers during the film's opening scene and the ensuing battle leaves numerous casualties on both sides, he shows the surviving humans mercy, allowing them to return to their leader, Col. McCullough (Woody Harrelson in a not-too-subtle nod to Marlon Brando's off-the-reservation Col. Kurtz in Francis Ford Coppola's Vietnam War epic Apocalypse Now).

They bring a message of armistice, but the colonel isn't having it. Fifteen years have passed since the Simian Flu outbreak, and with the human species on the brink of extinction, he plans to personally kill the ape leader his troops have spent the past two years hunting. Things don't go quite according to plan, however.

During a nighttime assault on Caesar's hidden settlement near the Pacific coast (illuminated by lapping firelight and captured beautifully by returning cinematographer Michael Seresin in 65mm format with vintage lenses), the ape leader, prematurely graying and walking more erect than ever, notices some green laser lights cutting through the tranquil darkness, soon broken by a muzzle flash. Surviving an assassination attempt led by the colonel himself, Caesar drives the invaders away, but not before he's suffered some devastating personal losses.

Dawn of the Planet of the Apes may have established Caesar as a pacifist, placing him at diametric odds with his best friend, Koba (Toby Kebbell), a militant chimp left physically and emotionally scarred from years of experiments conducted on him in a human lab. But our hero had to confront the limits to his pacifism when he was forced to take the life of a murderous Koba, who threatened a tentative peace that had been brokered with the civilian human survivors. Haunted by his actions (and literally haunted by guilt-driven visions of Koba, who sporadically appears as his fragile psyche wears down), Caesar chooses to embark on a lone mission of revenge against the colonel, separating from his ape brethren as they set off on a cross-country journey toward a mythical Promised Land.



Michael Giacchino's superb, chest-beating score supplements the Jerry Goldsmith-influenced themes he composed for Dawn with a new main theme that evokes John Barry at his best. It's a perfect complement to a Western-flavored film that begins as an Anthony Mann-style revenge picture akin to 1950's Winchester '73, becomes the best prison escape drama featuring anthropomorphized animals since 2000's Chicken Run and winds up in iconic John Ford territory as the sun sets on what Reeves has said is his final contribution to the long-running Planet of the Apes franchise, which now numbers nine films and two TV series. He leaves it in a perfect place, nicely setting up the 1968 original while embedding enough Easter eggs for longtime fans to appreciate and new fans to discover. ◆

FREE THINKERS

LATIN SOUL-ROCKERS EXPAND THEIR SOCIOPOLITICAL, PSYCHEDELIC HORIZONS

Los Angeles band Chicano Batman knows how to make a statement, from its attention-grabbing name and psychedelic soul music to its members' signature three-piece suits complete with tuxedo shirt ruffles.

"People might have some preconceived notions of who we are or what we represent just by hearing the name or by seeing how we dress," guitarist Carlos Arévalo says of what could seem like a kitschy gimmick. "Context is everything."

The suits actually pay homage to '60s and '70s soul groups that include romantic South American bands Los Angeles Negros and Los Pasteles Verdes. "They were inspired by James Brown like everyone else in the world and did their own take on that," says Arévalo, 33. And the Chicano Batman moniker combines sociopolitical identity with a pop-culture symbol of power. "People, no matter where they come from, can do important and meaningful things," he explains.

Chicano Batman has clearly become a meaningful force on the musical map, playing the Green River Festival on July 16 and Newport Folk on July 29 before winding back to the Paradise Rock Club on Oct. 7. The 9-year-old group is touring in support of its third album, March release Freedom Is Free, which newly emphasizes English over Spanish lyrics. "I want more people in the U.S. to know what we're saying," Arévalo says. And the record increases its political import in the process, from the anti-imperialist "The Taker Story" to the title track, which counters the Iraq War-era propaganda phrase "Freedom isn't free."

"Love's free, freedom's free. [These are] human traits that are inherent, and people try to co-opt them by trying to sell you something in some way or another," he says. "That perverts these beautiful ideals."

"People, no matter where they come from, can do important and meaningful things."

Singer/keyboardist Bardo Martinez, bassist Eduardo Arenas and Arévalo wrote many of the album's songs in 2015 amid Black Lives Matter protests over police misconduct. Yet they also seem to address the "Build the wall" climate of the Trump administration. "People have congratulated us, saying 'Your album is so well-timed' ... Well, we'd rather have not had a Sith Lord take over the United States," Arévalo says. "The record's taken on new meaning now for people who you'd say are now in the resistance. [It's] meant to be empowering and positive."

It's musically eclectic as well, drawing on Martinez and Arenas' attraction to Brazilian Tropicalia artists such as Caetano Veloso. The song "Angel Child" slides from sunny, spacey soul-funk to winding arrangements that echo band members' appreciation for Frank Zappa, and Arévalo brings his own love for Curtis Mayfield, electric Miles Davis and Jimi Hendrix into the mix. In his youth, he was also inspired by rockers Zack de la Rocha of Rage Against the Machine and Cedric Bixler Zavala and Omar Rodriguez-López of At the Drive In and the Mars Volta.

"Just the fact that they were blatantly brown guys with big curly hair," Arévalo says. "They looked like people I hung out with at that time. That was a game-changer for me. I grew up as an early teenager thinking that though I had this passionate love for music, that it just wasn't for me, that people like me wouldn't be accepted in that arena. But those guys flipped that for me."

Chicano Batman—rounded out by drummer Gabriel Villa—also found a kindred spirit when they made Freedom Is Free with New York producer Leon Michels. A soul revivalist who'd worked with Sharon Jones & the Dap Kings, Lee Fields & the Expressions and Black Keys frontman Dan Auerbach's projects for Dr. John and Ray LaMontagne, Michels gave Chicano Batman access to vintage gear.

"There's so much warmth with those analog instruments," Arévalo says, noting the thrill of hearing a Hammond B-3 organ through a Leslie speaker. "Oftentimes, people think we're trying to be retro and it's about going back into the past and that we're treading ground that's already been tread. That's not the case. To us, we view those arrangements, styles and equipment as timeless. They got it right. There's a sense of humanity." ◆

UNHAPPY MEALS

WHAT'S IN A BIG MAC'S "SPECIAL SAUCE" ANYWAY? SHAME AND REGRET, MOSTLY.

SOME YEARS AGO, I INTERVIEWED A contestant on The Biggest Loser, who told me that fast food is an unavoidable part of American life. I didn't argue that assertion, but later on I inventoried my own diet and realized that I'd somehow stayed off the rocks on this one, nobly resisting the siren call of the Big Mac, not to mention Taco Bell and Arby's. How have I avoided those and the attendant deleterious bodily effects? The same way I've avoided getting trampled by yaks in Mongolia or dying in a hang-glider accident, I guess.

However, I recently began to wonder: Am I missing something? Is my lifetime avoidance of the Big Mac not a badge of pride but a sign of insularity? What if I try Taco Bell on my deathbed and realize that it's the best thing ever? And what if I try Arby's? I mean, somebody should. It's time we learned what goes on in those buildings.

I feel lecherous and depraved as I pull into Arby's, like I'm approaching a drive-through peep show in a retirement community. While I'm creeping toward the menu board, an ambulance arrives. I figure it must be here to cart off a victim, but get this—the EMTs actually head inside to get lunch. Those people really are brave.

A few minutes later, armed with a classic roast beef sandwich and packets of the mysterious Arby's sauce, I head to McDonald's and order a Big Mac. Long ago, when I'd mentioned to my editor, Michael, that I'd never had a Big Mac, he replied, "What are you, a Communist?" No, I merely require all components of a sandwich to be thoroughly identified. And the Big Mac, with its "special sauce," fails that test. If it were really special, you'd tell me what it is.

Finally, I drive across the street to Taco Bell, my face a mask of shame and regret. In this case, I'd asked friends on social media what I should get. The answers included "Nine rolls of toilet paper," "Pepto-Bismol" and "the hell out of there." More earnest respondents recommended the simple beef taco and the outrageous Doritos Locos variation thereof. But I'm not even sure I can get those items individually, because Taco Bell doesn't seem to want to sell you one of anything. The outdoor menu recalls a collage designed by an eighth-grade girl using two dozen issues of Tiger Beat. It's just a riot of color and images and mutated bits of Spanish smashed together to create nonsense words. It almost seems like Taco Bell comes up with the names first and foods second—like someone at HQ doodles "Macho Banachos" on a whiteboard and two months later we've got banana-flavored tortilla chips served in a carton shaped like a mustache.

I go off-menu and order my two lone tacos, a move that is quietly accommodated for $2.97 (they must sense a pro out there, a man of discriminating tastes whose midday fiesta happens on his own terms). I then pull into the parking lot of a Dick's Sporting Goods, because what am I going to do, go home and break out a white tablecloth? No. This is food to be consumed furtively in a parking lot while wondering where it all went wrong.

I start with Arby's since I figure I should try that while I'm most hungry and still alive. Have you ever had Kelly's Roast Beef? Imagine that, but it's been floating in outer space for 2,000 years. The bun is OK, but the meat—dry yet somehow greasy—is like gnawing on the mummified remains of Jeremy Bentham. And Arby's sauce is like ketchup that lives under a bridge and steals FedEx packages off people's front steps. I choke down one bite. Now I've had Arby's.

It almost seems like Taco Bell comes up with the names first and foods second.

On to the Big Mac. It's just like eating two cheeseburgers at once, with the exception of that sauce, which still makes me wary. The whole thing is balmy and soft, like chewing on a warm Nerf football that's been left out in the rain. I eat half of it. Now I've had a Big Mac.

I save Taco Bell for last. I eat Mexican food all the time, so this is the one that I might actually find tempting, inasmuch as it casually resembles Mexican food. And the soft-shell beef taco: pretty good. It's disconcerting, though, how the meat is warm but the shell and cheese are ice-cold. I eat the whole taco and move onto the Doritos variant, which is a little much. I can see the appeal, but this is not a dish consumed (or likely invented) sober. Maybe I'd have enjoyed it more if it wasn't the final snack in Lucifer's lunchbox. But Taco Bell might earn a repeat visit when I hit rock bottom.

On my way home, feeling like I swallowed a rotten coconut, I conclude that this experiment only reinforced my long-held beliefs. Which is to say, there's a time and a place for fast food. And that time is breakfast, and that place is Dunkin' Donuts. ◆

Soroff On / Mindy Kaling

PASSION PROJECTS

THE HOMETOWN TALENT TALKS GIVING GOOD ADVICE, BEING MISRECOGNIZED AND BAD HABITS.

ACTOR, WRITER, PRODUCER, DIRECTOR AND AUTHOR Mindy Kaling, 38, was born and raised in Cambridge, and attended Buckingham Browne & Nichols School before graduating from Dartmouth College, where she studied classics prior to switching to playwriting. After college, she moved to New York and in 2002 appeared in Matt and Ben, a play she'd co-written about Damon and Affleck that became a cult hit. She became widely known for her role as Kelly Kapoor on The Office, and she also wrote, produced and directed episodes for the series. Her show The Mindy Project debuted in 2012, and its final season premieres on Hulu in September. Her next project, Champions, will air on NBC starting in the fall. On the big screen, her credits include The 40-Year-Old Virgin, No Strings Attached, Despicable Me and the forthcoming films Ocean's Eight and A Wrinkle in Time. Her comedic memoirs Is Everyone Hanging Out Without Me (And Other Concerns) and Why Not Me? are both best-sellers. She lives in Los Angeles.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Thing you laugh at but shouldn't?
MINDY KALING: I love accents and I'm never offended by them. I'm like Michael Scott [from The Office] that way.

When and where was the first time you ever felt popular? Never. Still waiting for the popularity thing to happen.

When was the first time you felt like a celebrity? About seven years ago, a woman at a Thai restaurant told me she loved me on Parks & Recreation.

Best advice you've ever given anyone? If you're meeting a woman for a date, it's better to be two hours late than 10 minutes early.

How many seasons do you think Champions will run? Probably like 18 seasons, and then 10 years later we'll come back and do a set of reunion shows once all of our careers have not gone the way we wanted.

How is doing the last season of The Mindy Project most different from the first? It's much easier. We're doing 10 episodes, and we're at Hulu, so we have a little more creative freedom. Plus, I now know how to make the million costume changes I do each episode much faster.

When you were at BB&N, were you the class clown? I wasn't. I was the friendly, chubby nerd.

Who's funnier: you or your funniest family member? I think that most modest celebrities would say their funniest family member, but I think they'd all be lying, so I'm gonna say me.

Thing you miss most about Boston? I miss ethnic white people.

How's your Latin these days? Extremely rusty. It's pretty much confined to reading off of coins, trying to impress people at dinner parties.

Any plays in your future? I haven't written a play in 15 years. I think I have stage fright now. Live performance was reserved for my older 20s. Now I have more anxiety about it.

You interned on Late Night with Conan O'Brien. Is he the quickest wit you know? To this day, I will say he is the quickest person I know. Just unbelievably clever and fast.

Worst habit? I interrupt people when I think I know where their train of thought is going, and it's almost always wrong. Also, I have a million questions during movies. I'm the one who asks loudly, "Is that the murderer?" Or "Is that the same blond actress from the other scene?"

Likelihood of a Broadway revival of Matt and Ben? Very, very unlikely, although I will say that was probably the funnest part I ever played.

Ever been the graduation speaker at any of your alma maters, and if so, what did you say? I've never spoken at any of my alma maters, which I'm choosing not to read too much into. But I have spoken at the Harvard Law School commencement, for some odd reason. [Laughs.] And I think whatever I told them was pretty boring, something like "Just be kind." But I was a 33-year-old giving Harvard law students advice, so the whole situation was wrong.

"I have a million questions during movies. I'm the one who asks loudly, 'Is that the murderer?' Or 'Is that the same blond actress from the other scene?'"

Is Anders Holm, who stars in Champions, your type? I think he's the average American woman's type. He's a great guy. Super funny. Handsome. Former athlete. Great husband and father. And I certainly hope he becomes every woman's type by the end of our show.

TV guilty pleasures? To quote Quentin Tarantino, "I don't believe in guilty pleasures. I only believe in pleasures."

Last time you flossed? I went to the orthodontist last week because I have these invisible braces, and so I last flossed about 15 minutes ago. I do it about 15 times a day. I'm a pathological flosser, and it's a major part of my life.

Least favorite topic of conversation? It would have to be either how tired someone is or someone talking about their dreams. I don't mean like goals and aspirations. I'm talking about their nightly dreams.

What one book would you take to a deserted island? The House of Mirth by Edith Wharton.

Favorite comedian? Well, I'm kind of partial to my best friend, B.J. Novak, but lately, I'm loving Ali Wong. She's a genius. So funny.

Favorite TV show when you were growing up? In Living Color. It made me feel cool watching it, and it also made me laugh. Plus, there were the Fly Girls with a pre-J.Lo Jennifer Lopez.

If you could have one superpower, what would it be? I'm TSA pre-clear, so I'm all good. ◆

A fashion designer, a basketball coach and a behavioral ecologist walk into a bar. It's no joke—it's how the issue you hold in your hands began.

Each spring, we gather a new crew of overachieving locals from diverse disciplines to form our Boston's Best judging panel. This year's roster also included a chef and a restaurateur, a musician and a meteorologist, entrepreneurs and nonprofit heads and myriad multihyphenate talents. They convened at Theater District hot spot blu for a delicious dinner and debate. Once we tallied their ballots and added in nominations from readers, staff and contributors, we got to work vetting the finalists to find the true crème de la crème in Boston dining, drinking, arts, fashion, fitness and more. Read on for the results—we hope you have as much fun using this guide as we did making it.

Bagels

EXODUS BAGELS

Boston is upping its bagel game—and Exodus is leading the way. Cali-raised rocker Adam Hirsh calls his cold-fermented carb wheels "culturally Jewish, not religiously Jewish," and he indeed replicates what works (flaky outsides, soft middles!) without slavishly adhering to tradition (hence the Sriracha cream cheese and creative sandwiches). Exodus distributes dozen-bagel "GrabSacs" through pop-ups, farmers markets and pickup at its Roslindale facility—which Hirsh hopes could one day be a full-service deli/restaurant. Godspeed.

Banh Mi

PHO VIET'S

You can find outstanding purveyors of this brilliant Vietnamese street-food sandwich in Fields Corner and Savin Hill. But our favorite cheap, satisfying, healthy sandwich—with its vivid flavors of Asian cold cuts or grilled meats, Kewpie mayo, chilies, quick pickles and fresh herbs—is located in a humble food court adjacent to an Asian supermarket in Allston. A great crackly rice- and wheat-flour baguette plus abundant fillings make this the four-dollar lunch to beat in Boston.

Bartender

GWEN HAGERTY AT BAR MEZZANA

At Colin and Heather Lynch's acclaimed coastal Italian restaurant, justly lauded for fabulous seafood and pastas, Ryan Lotz oversees the South End's best bar program. Each of his bartenders has the right stuff: superb mixology, wine and food service skills. But to this Hagerty adds unparalleled cheer and a megawatt smile that could make the weariest office drone forget a miserable workday. In Boston's firmament of bartending stars, Hagerty is the sunniest of suns.

Barbecue

THE SMOKE SHOP

After opening the South End's Tremont 647 nearly 20 years ago, chef/owner Andy Husbands began honing his slow-smoking skills in barbecue competitions across the country. His prize-winning St. Louis-style pork ribs are the star of the show at his new Cambridge restaurant, but he also turns out terrific brisket, pulled pork, fiery Texas hot links and a bevy of superb side dishes like brisket-flecked pit beans. This is as fine as Yankee 'cue gets.

Bread

BAMBARA

Newburyport native David Bazirgan spent 13 years as a chef at trendy San Fran restaurants before returning to the East Coast and breathing new life into the kitchen at Cambridge's Bambara. His menu reflects multiple global influences, but Bazirgan taps his own Armenian heritage for excellent choereg, the traditional Easter bread—warm loaves sprinkled with za'atar spice and served with salted honey butter. For a nominal $2.50, it's a fine substitute for free bread service.

Brazilian

MUQUECA

Cambridge Street east of Inman Square remains a hotbed of fine Portuguese and Brazilian fare, but this colorful storefront stands out with its bright, homey mashup of European, South American and African influences in enormous portions at very gentle prices. Seafood dishes show off crystalline flavors in lovely preparations, notably the restaurant's stellar moqueca completa, a bubbling stew of fish, shrimp, squid and mussels cooked and served in a traditional clay pot.

Brewery

AERONAUT BREWING COMPANY

Some microbrewers, we must admit, veer toward the insufferably self-serious. Not Aeronaut. This Somerville suds maker is committed to its craft, but its production facility/taproom also hosts daily events that demonstrate a desire to be a fun hub—not just a place to wax esoteric about hops and malts. Examples: near-nightly live music, visits from food trucks and artisan food-makers (including a "chocolatier in residence"), film screenings and weekly Sunday community picnics. Cheers, Aeronaut.

Brunch

TAJ BOSTON

Among Boston's many beautiful brunches served on sun-splashed patios, Sunday rooftop service at the Taj stands out with its 17th-story views of the Public Garden, white-tablecloth pomp and luxury menu featuring a raw bar (Jonah crab claws in season!), traditional Indian dishes and swish desserts. Think of it as the ritziest big-wedding rehearsal meal you've ever attended, plan to drop more than a hundred bucks a head with drinks and bring someone who'll appreciate its old-fashioned charms: Mom, for instance.

Charcuterie

PURITAN & COMPANY

Will Gilson's farm-to-table standby has built a loyal following by fusing modern technique with superb local ingredients in a tastefully rustic room. Repeat visits are rewarded by his devotion to the seasonal, but there's never a time of year when his smoking, curing and pickling skills don't dazzle, as with his gorgeously smoky/peppery swordfish pastrami and creamy/earthy chicken-liver mousse that gains piquant contrast from rhubarb giardiniera. Pretty sure the Puritans never had it this good.

Cheese Plate

TROQUET ON SOUTH

Recently relocated from its longtime perch on Boston Common to a roomier Leather District space, Troquet preserves its dedication to the enjoyment of great wines with chef/owner Scott Hebert's pretty, French-inspired food. The beauty of its three- and six-course tableside service from a dozen-plus assortment of carefully tempered cheeses is a reflection of that ethos. Ask sommelier/co-owner Chris Campbell to help steer your cheese selections and wine pairings from his newly expanded cellar.

Chinese

BLR BY SHOJO

Once a dumpy but beloved Cantonese joint, the reinvented Best Little Restaurant now features scrubbed-up good looks evoking an illicit Chinatown gambling den. The menu occasionally alights on South China classics like the weird-but-good honey-walnut shrimp with mayo sauce, but as often strays into fusion-minded updates like whole trout (roasted instead of steamed) and mooshu pancakes with Francophilic duck confit and Brussels sprouts. It's wild, woolly and fun: a useful bridging of the old Chinatown and the new.

Burger

BRASSICA KITCHEN + CAFE

Bright and bold young culinary talents Jeremy Kean and Philip Kruta first wowed crowds as pop-up chefs and Wink & Nod's inaugural residents, then at this debut restaurant of their own near the Forest Hills T station. In typical fashion, the pair's take on a burger combines subversive wit and fine-dining execution, piling a pub-sized patty with pickled-then-smoked green tomatoes, chili-spiked aioli and white American cheese on a house-baked brioche bun. It's creative, kicky and classic all at once.

Comeback

EAST COAST GRILL

This historic wood-grilled seafood and barbecue spot pioneered many dining concepts we now take for granted, like fresh-juice margaritas and obsessive love of fresh chilies. We mourned its 2016 closing as the internment of a legend. Happily, the Highland Kitchen gang rescued it from oblivion this year. The ECG is that rare bird: an iconic restaurant whose ancient claims to fame are still as fresh and relevant today as when it opened more than 30 years ago.

Still one of Boston's finest New England seafood restaurants, this tiny, eternally crowded space taunts impatient locals intolerant of long waits to get seated. Find a way—say, a "dentist appointment" that allows you to visit at 3 pm on a Tuesday—and reward your ingenuity with truly sublime clam chowder, featuring the concentrated flavor of proper clam stock, pristine Wellfleet cherrystones, scant dairy and none of the abominable thickeners that desecrate tourist-joint knockoffs.

This social justice-minded java joint, housed inside the rehabbed Bruce C. Bolling Municipal Building, fuels its Roxbury neighborhood's recent renaissance. Yes, the charming cafe offers espresso drinks, beer and wine, plus eclectic eats using locally sourced ingredients—including healthful rice bowls named for historic female figures. (Michelle Obama's curry chicken, anyone?) But it's also proved a generous host to community organizers' events—from poetry slams to paint nights—and recruits employees through partnerships with local youth programs.

Colombian

EL KIOSCO

A stone's throw from the Orient Heights T stop is this versatile combination of dark, atmospheric bar and sunny, casual restaurant serving traditional Colombian dishes in enormous portions at sweet prices. Even the "mini" version of the classic bandeja plate—small steak, big strip of chewy/crisp/tender chicharrones, fried egg, avocado, plantains, rice, beans and corn cakes—is staggering, and a gentle $12.50. Tossing back a crisp, light Cerveza Aguila or two won't hurt a bit, either.

Cookie

HI-RISE BREAD COMPANY

Rene Becker, founder of this now-iconic Cambridge baking biz, used to be a food critic—which may explain the palpable pursuit of perfection that embodies Hi-Rise. Besides bread, ever-changing splays of cookies are a hi-light here, especially signature Oreo-like treats of fudgy chocolate sandwiching vanilla cream. The secret is in Becker's scrupulous sourcing, starting with a bakery's base: butter. He uses European-style Plugra, known for its high butterfat content—and the flavor that comes with it.

JULIET

We love eating at Juliet; unlike many restaurants, we'd love working there too. At their elegant yet accessible European-inspired cafe, chef Josh Lewin and Katrina Jazayeri pioneer an "Open Book Management" approach with staff, employing a comprehensive business-literacy system to help workers build rounded hospitality careers in a gig economy. And there's no tipping: Juliet pays staff livable hourly wages plus quarterly shares of profits, giving everyone greater incentive—and stronger stakes in collective success.

You can, however, count on eclectic, ever-changing plates from chef/co-owner Keith Pooler, delicious tipples from bar manager Paul Manzelli and warm, welcoming service from every staff member. Deli

MAMALEH'S

Greater Boston is home to many Ashkenazi Jews, so why are our delicatessens so terrible? That question became academic once this spot from the State Park team opened, not only serving extraordinary versions of deli classics—corned beef, latkes, gribenes, lox, pickled herring, pastrami, knishes, matzah-ball soup, celery soda, babka, bagels, bialys (yessss!)—but making them in-house. In an age when the traditional Jewish deli is waning, Cambridge is now blessed to have an absolutely amazing one.

At the center of Boston's current fine-dining Greek revival is this chic, charming, hectic little South End spot with a brilliant sidewalk patio. Kava never strays far from tradition, its focus on mezedakia fitting perfectly with our penchant for social dining. And its endless combinations of atomic Mediterranean ingredients—olive oil, lemon, honey, phyllo, greens and nightshade, thick yogurt and rustic cheeses, charcoal-grilled lamb and chicken and seafood—seem both familiar and revelatory today.

THE AUTOMATIC

Esteemed bartending pooh-bah Dave Cagle's new Kendall Square bar is a throwback in all the right ways, working nostalgic mid-century tropes like your grandpa's rec-room wood paneling, precisely composed but fun cocktails, flatteringly dim lighting and a menu from the iconic Chris Schlesinger that supports the drinking, not vice versa. Nevertheless, it's an exceptional bar-food roster, epitomized by the classic "Messy" New England Frank: a Pearl frank on a split-top bun with chili, onions and cheese.

RITU KI RASOI

Located at the butt end of a brick warehouse fronted by Burlington Auto Parts, this South Indian vegetarian restaurant delivers an array of beautiful, fragrant, complexly spiced stews and sautes of vegetables, legumes, farmer cheeses and rice, as well as Indian-Chinese dishes and street-food snacks like chaats and pav bhaji. What will stick in your memory is the moment when servers whisk platters of Ritu's smashing dosas (rice- and lentil-flour crepes) directly from the kitchen to your table.

GRACIE'S ICE CREAM

Gracie's owner Aaron Cohen named his Somerville shop—a fairly early entry in the artisanal ice cream trend—after his young daughter. Makes sense, as Funky flavors like In the Loop (raspberry with Froot Loops cereal), Fanta soda floats and an upcoming menu of instant-waffle sandwiches stuffed with torched Fluff-ernutter, jelly and more all make us feel like kids again. Also sweet: The parlor's ongoing "Community Days" donate sales to orgs like local school PTAs.

UNI

Ken Oringer's reinvention of his longstanding, formal and expensive flagship Clio and sashimi bar UNI into a single restaurant—sashimi bar on one end, sushi bar on the other, a simpler izakaya menu and a much-improved bar in between—was timely and welcome. You can still blow out your credit line on exotic raw seafood flown directly from Tokyo, but the fabulous new lineup of ramen, yakitori and dozens of other affordable small plates make UNI a feasible non-occasion night out.

LA MORRA

Husband-and-wife team Josh and Jennifer Ziskin hum along with uncommon consistency at their romantic restaurant plopped just outside Brookline Village. The two-floor, brick-lined space, lovely as a Lombard cottage, eschews red-sauce fare in favor of Northern Italian cuisine that is rustic and refined. Think Cornish hen under a brick with mint polenta or mushroom risotto with charred onion gremolata, accompanied by stellar wines poured—thanks to an innovative extraction system that promotes longevity—without uncorking a bottle.

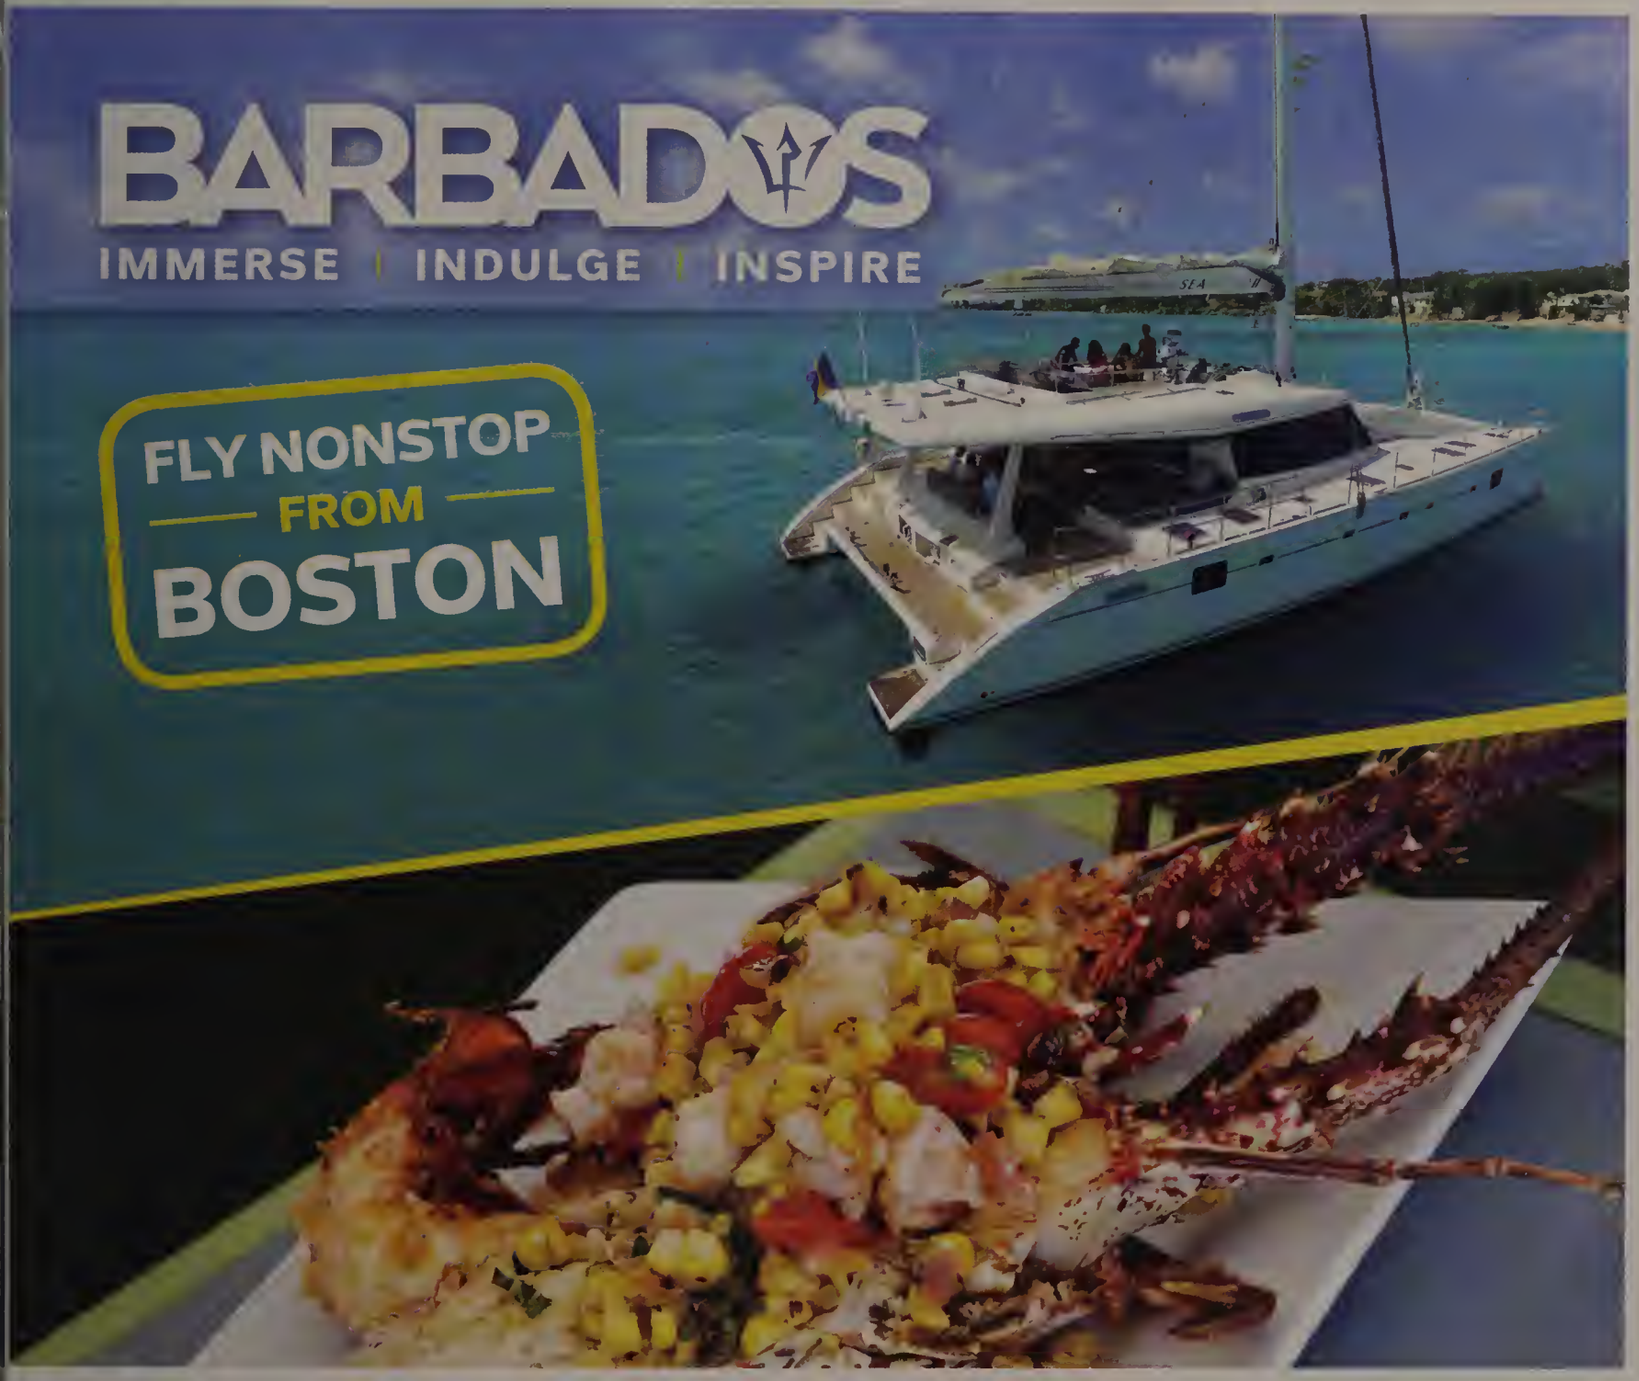
YVONNE'S



The nightclubby Yvonne's is versatile. Stellar bartending makes for some classy hooching, while stunning ambiance and a terrific shareable menu present a glamorous backdrop for a dressed-up dinner with a crowd. "Feast" plates are big enough for a whole table, none more dramatic than the grilled "viper" chop, a looong, narrow plate of slow-roasted pork ribs on kimchee fried rice with crispy shallots. Like a lot of Yvonne's patrons, it's a scrumptious head-turner.

New Restaurant

LITTLE DONKEY

At their two previous collaborations, Jamie Bissonnette and Ken Oringer had to stay in specific small plates lanes: Italian at Coppa, Spanish at Toro. Their new Central Square spot frees them to color outside the lines, skittering around the world (hello, Pakistan, China, Turkey, Thailand, Hawaii, New England) and indulging their late-night bong-hit-inspired whims. Combined with a stellar bar program and more spacious digs, it yields the year's most fun, fanciful, delectable new spot.

Lobster Roll

BELLE ISLE SEAFOOD

Looking for shore-shack ambiance but can't hit the Maine coast? This fish market/restaurant in Boston's backyard, just over the bridge from Eastie in Winthrop, is your answer. Fried seafood and icy beers are a draw, but the Maine lobster roll is the stud of the lineup: a proper split-top bun generously stuffed with mayo-kissed tail and claw meat, plus a token lettuce leaf. It's so canonical it could illustrate the dictionary definition.

SRV

Follow the pretty crowds to this swinging South End slinger of Venetian fare. Traditional-sized plates are lovely, but it's as fun to graze here the way they do in the Serene Republic, on a parade of tiny bites known as cicchetti. Foremost among these are juicy little pork-and-beef polpette with a wicked tomato sauce loaded with garlic and umami-enhanced with sopressata and finocchiona. At two per order, you'll want (nay, need) to get a lot of them.

SARMA

Chef/co-owner Cassie Piuma continues to beguile at this casually warm, inviting spot at the edge of Winter Hill. The inspiration for her four dozen small plates centers on Turkey but stretches to the Strait of Gibraltar around both sides of the Mediterranean. Piuma conjures almost alchemical magic from a singularly vivid and variegated spice palette, not coincidentally producing many of the city's most wondrous vegetarian dishes. The first-rate cocktail and wine program complete a quietly thrilling picture.

Roast Chicken
LA BRASA

"Brasa" is Spanish for embers, so you'd expect this place could roast chicken. You'd be right. Chef/owner Daniel Bojorquez turned to Gardner's Blue Barn, a custom fabrication shop, to build the wood-fueled oven at the heart of the kitchen. CHILACATES

When Socrates Abreu opened the first Chilacates in a cramped JP storefront, it was a useful corrective to Boston's onslaught of fancy faux-Mex places slinging $14 pastel cocktails and $9 tacos that nobody south of the border would recognize. Cozy Bar

ANCHOVIES

Spiffier South End spots attract see-and-be-seen crowds. But when you want to slip away to a dimly lit den, sidle up to the dark wooden bar at this neighborhood haunt, announced only by a small neon sign hanging over the single window's flower box. The space is strewn with bric-a-brac, the pours are generous, and the faces are friendly (and frequently chatty). It's also a last-call favorite for serving a full Italian-American menu until 1:30 am.

Dance Night

MAGNUM SATURDAYS AT DBAR

Is bigger always better? Depends who you ask. But it's hard to argue with the (mostly gay) crowd that swells at this Dorchester restaurant on Saturday nights, when the dining tables are pulled aside and the space fills with sweaty lovers of Top 40 remixes. Magnum keeps things interesting with frequent theme parties, from '90s nights to Spcedo soirces to a recent "Anything Goes But Clothes" costume contest. Hey, dbar: We like what you're packing.

Dive Bar

DRINKING FOUNTAIN

As the glut of luxury condo builds attests, nowhere in Boston is safe from gentrification. So dive bars—those reliably cheap and gritty watering holes that every neighborhoods needs—are becoming an endangered species. Quirky JP, at least, still sips faithfully from the Fountain, a delightfully dank hole in the wall where it looks like some locals have been playing Keno since opcning—and drinks can basically be bought with couch cushion change.

Dream Living Room

THE HAWTHORNE

Many Boston cocktail bars compete to most accurately resemble a hipster's idea of his great-grandfather's favorite speakeasy. Not the Hawthorne. The husband-and-wife team at Sheffield Interiors created a space that feels more like a home's salon than a saloon, with inviting arrangemcnts of contemporary furnishings, mixed prints and smart accents. Add in gracious hospitality and delicious drinks like Under the Volcano—made with Del Maguey Chichicapa mezcal, Lustau East India sherry, Amaro Nonino and mole bitters—and wc're ready to move in.

DJ

NATHANAEL BLUHM

Diversity is this DJ's strongest suit. Bluhm is a gently subversive pied piper whose deft mixing and genre-spanning library moves the masses while simultaneously satisfying in-the-know music nerds. He'll people-please at festivals, like spring's Taste of Somerville, then energize niche crowds at his LGBT-oriented regular gigs: poppish Thursdays at Club Cafe, hip-hop-skewing Saturdays at Machine and, on three out of four Fridays, eclectic era-jumping electronica at the Alley Bar.

Industry Hangout

TRINA'S STARLITE LOUNGE

For years, this intimate Inman Square hangout has been a bright beacon summoning service pros to its famous industry brunch on Mondays. It still shines. The retro, '60s roadhouse-inspired decor has a vaguely rockabilly air, augmenting the cultish street cred of a spot where servers, cooks and bartenders—and interloping neighborhood hipsters—chow Cajun-style fried chicken and slurp carbonated cocktails when they're finally off the clock.

First-Date Destination

THE GALLOWS

Finding a first-date spot is tricky. You want the place to feel fun but not forced, with reasonable price points lodged between "penny pincher" and "moneybags." The Gallows is always a perfect match. The reliably buzzy South End gastropub has a liveliness that lubricates conversation (creative cocktails help too), and shareable plates like loaded poutine and pork belly pinchos suggest a non-cloying sense of humor—just like a good date does.

Gay Scene

CLUB CAFE

It's been around for more than 30 years and still attracts a block-long line of gays waiting to get inside. It's either a Madonna concert or Club Cafe, the '83-born, still-pounding heart of Boston's LGBT community: a go-to gathering spot for orgs planning activism over alcohol, a steward of gay cabaret culture in its front lounge and a default dance destination in its rear club, where coming out to bump and grind remains a rite of passage.

Hidden Gem

HARBORSIDE LOUNGE

"Gem" and "airport bar" are rarely seen in the same sentence, but the Hyatt Regency Boston Harbor plays unexpected host to an airy, tall-windowed bar with a killer patio. Patrons enjoy one of the most breathtaking views of the Boston skyline to be found anywhere, a 200-degree shoreline vista stretching from Eastie's Boston Harbor Shipyard & Marina all the way to Castle Island. Don't drive to Logan: Cross the harbor in a cheap, charming water taxi instead.

Hotel Bar

HOJOKO

This kooky izakaya inside the rock 'n' roll-themed Verb Hotel is the antithesis of all those unstylish lobby bars where sad traveling salesmen slump and get sauced. Here, cocktail-loving cool kids sip some of the city's most interesting sake selections, including keg-based styles, amid colorful, kitschy decor seemingly designed for an anime avatar of Donna Reed. They lug tropics-evoking communal cocktails out to the pool. And they wash down midnight snacks of ramen with Japanese whisky. Ho, yes.

Mocktails

WAYPOINT

It's easy to scoff at mocktails. They typically languish in a forgotten corner of the menu, unattended to by any but the pregnant or sober. So shout-out to Seth Freidus, beverage director at this coastal cuisine-focused Harvard Square hit, for being as creative and ambitious with his booze-free drinks as he is with spirited stuff. From ginger ale spiked with pickled cherry-pepper puree to a just-sweet-enough blackberry-thyme shrub, these mocktails mean serious business.

Irish Pub

THE FIELD

This may start a Dropkick Murphys-scored riot, but we have to say it: Some of the area's best Irish pubs aren't even in Southie. Exhibit A: The Field, sited solidly in the People's Republic of Cambridge, where white-, blue- and every color of collar convene for convivial times over perfectly poured pints of Guinness. The cash-only joint has pool, darts and a rare-for-Central Square rear patio that has us yelling "Sláinte!" all summer long.

Jazz Club

WALLY'S CAFE

This narrow, easy-to-miss South End bar practically vibrates with a venerable history of nightly jazz performances by hallowed veteran musicians and up-and-coming talents from nearby Berklee. The tightly packed crowd is also notably more diverse than at most Boston nightspots. Early-evening jam sessions give way at 9:30 pm to jazz of all stripes as well as blues, funk and salsa. At the tender age of 70, Wally's is still the most jumping little joint in town.

If there's any single neighborhood that has last-call hangouts on lock, it's Chinatown. But it's sleepy Brookline that actually has the best Chinese joint doubling as a nightcap destination. On weekends, Temple's devout fans know to slide into its unexpected E Room, where the otherwise chill restaurant hosts slinky DJ-led dance parties, serves food until 1:30 am and sends you home—alone or, likely, not—feeling full and festive.

THE SUPPER CLUB AT CAPO

While you might be content to enjoy the rustic environs of Capo's ground-floor restaurant—and the classic Italian American dishes—you're missing out if you don't venture downstairs to the Supper Club. With a checkered floor and wood paneling on one end, and a stage that hosts live music sets on the other end, there's a vibe that's one part grandma's basement, one part '50s jazz club. The inventive cocktail list from Kevin Mabry is no joke, but stop in on a Monday night and you can find plenty of laughs at the recurring comedy show.

STRAIGHT LAW AT TABERNA DE HARO

Three years ago, Brookline tapas stalwart Taberna de Haro branded its 13-seat bar as Straight Law, a nod to a classic gin and sherry cocktail. It continues to approach fortified Spanish wines with finesse, identifying superlative bottles for use in cocktails—from the eponymous Manzanilla tincture to an Amontillado-based sherry cobbler—and in four-variety flights that educate as well as they inebriate. Which is to say: Very well, indeed.

THE HOTELIER'S GOODNESS

We don't want to tell them how to do their jobs, but the Worcester-bred outfit might be underselling the product with the title of their third studio album—because Goodness, released late last May (just missing the cutoff to snag last year's award), is pretty great. When they broke onto the scene with 2014's darkly introspective Home, Like Noplace Is There, the Hotelier was heralded among a handful of local bands at the forefront of the emo revival. They've since shed the shackles of that contentious genre, proving themselves a rock band to be reckoned with. On Goodness frontman Christian Holden is no less lyrically verbose—and the material no less personal—but he is ready to deal with his considerable stock of emotional angst on a higher plane.

THIRD THURSDAYS AT THE GARDNER MUSEUM

Isabella Stewart Gardner was a legendary hostess who unveiled her prized palace at a 1903 blowout brimming with Champagne, doughnuts and bold-faced names, so she'd surely smile to see the party that draws art lovers there each month, an often sold-out soiree that always offers something new to see, hear and do. Consider recent installment Madonna/Madonna, which had revelers roaming the galleries on a scavenger hunt for visions of the Virgin Mary, moving to the likes of "Like a Virgin" via a vinyl-spinning DJ, striking a pose in the studio for a collaborative art project and taking in exhibit-inspired talks and performances. And there's nothing quite like sipping cocktails around that courtyard garden, a lush oasis even in the depths of February.

Band

PVRIS

The Lowell-bred electro-rockers of Pvris have been steadily building buzz since releasing their 2014 debut, White Noise, and fans eagerly awaited word of their follow-up—until this April, when the trio wiped their social media accounts before tweeting a cryptic photo and the hashtag "#AWKOHAWNOH." Followers went wild trying to decipher the message, which turned out to be a nod to All We Know of Heaven, All We Need of Hell, their sophomore album dropping Aug. 4. We're guessing it won't disappoint, as Pvris is currently on a massive summer tour alongside Jared Leto-fronted Thirty Seconds to Mars in support of mega-rockers Muse. Don't blink: This is a band to keep your eye on lest they skyrocket out of sight.

THE MIT LIST VISUAL ARTS CENTER

MIT's rep for math and science precedes itself, but its contemporary art museum is world-class too. Dynamic group exhibitions have included An Inventory of Shimmers, featuring major names like Anicka Yi and Sophie Calle, while the List Projects series spotlights emerging artists like Kennеth Tam, who uses Craigslist and Reddit to recruit participants for his discomfiting experiments. The List also manages a permanent collection (including 51 pieces of public art), commissions new works through MIT's Percent for Art program and oversees a unique student loan program that lends 600 works to students (who get to enjoy infinitely cooler dorm decor than the rest of us did). And thanks to a new program that launched this year, we can take a closer look at the art on tours with specially trained student guides.

Comedian

LAMONT PRICE

If organizers were stressed when Boston Calling's Film Festival was scrapped two months before the event, they didn't show it. Festival booker Trevor Solomon swiftly tapped comedy vet Lamont Price, a collaborator on a previous fest, to help him curate local talent for a replacement comedy experience. Price also took the stage, more than holding his own alongside marquee names like Hannibal Buress, Tig Notaro and Pete Holmes. That's no surprise, as the prolific local stand-up artist has made the rounds at Funny or Die's Oddball Fest, the Just For Laughs Festival in Montreal and this year's Boston Comedy Festival—not to mention the Twittersphere, where Price is equally adept at 140-character jabs at the president (#covfefe, anyone?) and meme takedowns.

BOSTON COMEDY CHICKS

Boston Comedy Chicks hold their shows and workshops at Doyle's Cafe in JP, so you know they're no divas. Rather, they're a community of local comedians and storytellers who support each other on the local scene—a scene they're striving to make more inclusive and diverse through their work with the annual Women in Comedy Festival and their dedication to showcasing performers of all genders and identities, with, naturally, a focus on female stand-ups. Drop by Doyle's for a beer and a laugh, or book some BCC comedians for an event—their brand of girl power is no joke, but it sure is funny.

Classical Ensemble

PHOENIX

Call it classical gone casual. This 3-year-old orchestra performs on the same level as the audience—in fact, a few lucky listeners get to sit right in the middle of the action. Themed programs mix eras and ensemble sizes; take spring concert "Home," which showcased works by six composers who immigrated to the U.S., from Stravinsky and Bartok to 30-something Tehran-to-San Fran transplant Sahba Aminikia. The musicians chat about the selections before, during and after the performance, and there's always a bar in the venue. Music to our ears.

Dance Date Night

JOSÉ MATEO BALLET THEATRE

This isn't your average night at the ballet, where you're unlikely to see your date's face until intermission. Instead, you'll be seated at cabaret-style tables that share the floor with the dancers, close enough to see muscles flex and hear every footfall echo through the Sanctuary Theatre, aka the Old Cambridge Baptist Church. The moves are as distinct as the intimate setting—this is the only ballet company in New England with a repertory entirely produced by its resident choreographer, José Mateo, who recently received a Commonwealth Award from the Massachusetts Cultural Council in recognition of his 30 years as founder and artistic director. And thanks to a new wine curation program featuring sips from top local somms, you two will have something delicious to drink while watching the dance.

ELISA H. HAMILTON

Hamilton's art brings people together. This MassArt alum has transformed parks and sidewalks into dance floors for her Dance Spot series. She brought a supermarket for superpowers to the South End during a residency at the BCA, raising questions about opportunities for heroism in our lives. And this spring, as part of the exhibit Listen Hear: The Art of Sound, she filled the Gardner Museum's Calderwood Hall with audio recorded by teens from Roxbury, Mission Hill and Hyde Square, whose dinner table conversations and drama club monologues wound up on vinyl records adorned with photos and art. The community listening space, dubbed Sound Lab, invited museumgoers to take their turn at the mic, too—the latest manifestation of an inclusive, participatory practice that finds joy in the everyday.

BREAK THE CHAINS

As far as we're concerned, any place we're dancing should be an accepting, inclusive space (we don't want to be judged for our flailing limbs when the DJ plays our jam). So we're very much down with what local queer activist and multitalented performer Evan Greer is doing with Break the Chains. The all-gender/all-genre/queer and trans-friendly dance party pops up at venues around town on a semi-monthly basis, and the event has evolved from its very DIY beginnings to host both local and national performers (like recent headliners the Shondes). No dress code, no judgments, no reason not to hit the floor running.

#MFANOW OVERNIGHTS

More than 23,000 night owls flocked to the Museum of Fine Arts this fall for four free, all-night parties thrown as part of a seasonlong celebration of contemporary art. The first-come, first-served events drew lines, but waiting crowds warmed up with cocoa dispensed by one of the artist/educator hosts. The wait was well worth it: While the rest of the city slept, the museum hummed with DJs, artist demos, lectures, pop-up performance art, film screenings, live painting and duct-tape mural making, Drawing After Dark sessions and chances to check out exhibits like a survey of LA artist Frances Stark's 25-year career. If you snoozed through it all, fear not—the MFA is launching a new late-night signature series in October.

Little Studio That Could

STARLAB STUDIOS

This Somerville-born multimedia studio has been twice displaced—first to make room for the Green Line's as-yet-unrealized extension through the 'hood, then again in January of last year, when a legal battle with its new landlord almost put it out of business for good. Thanks to fundraising efforts from a community of fans and fellow artists, however, Starlab has found new digs in Charlestown, where the studio's small staff of four has been back to work on local projects in music, photography and film and video production, including a recent music video shoot for local punk band the Dazies and a short sci-fi film shot in Somerville. And they're back to work on September's Starlab Fest, the annual music fest and block party they've been throwing for eight years. Keep shining.

MICHAEL CHRISTMAS' "NOT THE ONLY ONE"

Michael Christmas has earned a rep in the Boston rap game for a genial, laid-back style marked by sly humor and winking self-deprecation—and despite plugs from the likes of Complex and Vice, he's the kind of rapper you know is going to stay true to his roots. Refer to his April video "Not the Only One," in which Christmas wakes up after a bender, shoeless on a fire escape somewhere in downtown Boston, and attempts to retrace his steps. That journey takes him on a rambling trip that will tickle hometown fans, one that includes stops to eat a sandwich in front of the Mass. Ave. T station, a walk through the Pru with his boys and a stroll down Newbury Street, where a woman snickers at him in front of Pinkberry. It's signature Christmas: hip-hop that's both humble and humorous.

Musician

JULIE RHODES

Somerville's Rhodes possesses the kind of voice that transcends time and place, reminiscent of smooth '60s soul crooners with a dash of the ragged howl heard in Alabama Shakes' Brittany Howard. So it's fitting that the former ice-cream parlor scooper recorded her debut album at Muscle Shoals' FAME Studios, where the likes of Etta James, Aretha Franklin and Otis Redding once sang. That fiery 2016 debut, Bound to Meet the Devil, was a hell of an entrance to the music world, earning the singer/songwriter four Boston Music Award noms and one win for Best New Artist this winter—after just one year as a working musician. This April, Rhodes released a recording of James' "I'd Rather Go Blind," a bluesy gut-kicker of a cover that has us looking out for a forthcoming sophomore record.

"LITTLE HOUSE ON GREEN STREET"

When City Realty Group purchased a dilapidated, uninhabited house at 197 Green St. in Jamaica Plain with as-yet-undetermined plans for its use, the ramshackle structure very well could have sat indefinitely in a devolving state of disrepair. Instead, City Realty reached out to artist collective Avenue of Arts and offered them the house as a temporary, no-strings-attached canvas for part of the realty group's City Pop initiative. "We thought it was a great opportunity to revitalize what had been a run-down, underutilized property," says City Realty's Clifford Kensington. After three weeks in the hands of the collective's street artists, the house is now awash with vibrantly colored graffiti and pop art—an eyesore turned eye candy. And it will remain as such for at least another year, according to Kensington. Stop on by.

For the New England premiere of Jackie Sibblies Drury's Really, a play set in a photography studio, they turned a South End gallery into an intimate theatrical space, one that allowed audiences to take in a complementary photography exhibition after the show. And they brought 80 one-minute plays to the MFA for Every 28 Hours, a performance in support of the Black Lives Matter movement. We're on the edge of our seats for season 19.

A wacky take on TV game shows of yore—if Bob Barker was a Somervillian hipster with friends in bands—the show has enjoyed a semi-monthly residence at Oberon, among other locations, and had its biggest night yet at the Wilbur this February. Part interactive quiz show, part variety show, and all irreverent, wacked-out fun, the Ginny Nightshade-produced spectacular features a rotating crew of local musicians, stand-ups and other performers who take the stage between rounds of thematic and weird-as-hell trivia. Recent editions have included a category called "Baby Mama Drama," for which audience members guessed famous, often disturbing, movie scenes as drawn by children. The price is wrong in all the right ways.

Designed by William Rawn Associates, the makeover also encompassed a new innovation center, an expanded fiction section, a WGBH satellite studio, the Newsfeed Cafe and a far more open and intuitive ground floor with plenty of perches for getting lost in a good read.

DEWOLFE LEATHER GOODS

Stylish Bostonians have been heeding the call of deWolfe, a line of minimalist leather goods made by School of Fashion Design grad Gina deWolfe. Armed with her grandfather's leathersmith tools and hides salvaged from the food industry by local tanneries, she fashions gorgeous clutches and bags like her trademark Wolfepack backpack. We've been fans of her pop-ups for years, so the opening of a new studio boutique on Nantucket—and hints of a possible Converse collaboration—have us howling with excitement.

KODOMO

Outfitting the grade-school set in fashion-forward threads is child's play for South End boutique Kodomo and its sister shop Kodomo (annex) in Beacon Hill. Owner Jasmine Punzalan stocks styles from an international roster of indie designers who favor slow manufacturing, neutral colors and graphic prints, like celeb fave (and her sons' go-to) Nununu out of Israel. Dresses, tees, tailored shirts and pants, shoes and accessories satisfy everyone from infants through tweens—plus parents who wish the fashions came in their size.

Clothing Line

ALICE WALK

Founder Emily Keneally may be the brains behind this semi-custom line, but you're the boss. Shoppers can select from nine silhouettes (a shirtdress and a boat-neck style are also in the works) and 31 textiles like the Nantucket-ready Ocean Ripples and classic bonded tweed, most sourced from France and Italy. Go for favorites like the crop top or the tailored jacket, or opt for an updated classic by adding Aztec fringe to a shift dress. Each piece is hand-sewn in her South Boston studio, and in a few weeks, it's all yours.

Accessories

BOBBLES & LACE

Whether your style leans boho, classic or preppy, you'll discover perfectly bewitching baubles in co-owners Valerie White and Lindsay Rose Rando's stash. The shop may be tiny, but it's packed with wallet-friendly finds that include more than 40 choker styles, 100-plus rings and a wall of sunglasses. The cascade earrings and threaded ball bracelets are show-stealers, while vegan leather crossbodies appeal to socially conscious fashionistas. And for those "dirty hair, don't care" days, check out the selection of floral caps.

Innovator

MINISTRY OF SUPPLY

Innovation is a given for a company that started at MIT and uses hyper-breathable materials invented at NASA. Ministry of Supply's businesswear follows technology—not trends—without sacrificing style. The team field-tests dozens of prototypes to perfect pieces like moisture-wicking dress shirts and coffee-infused socks that keep odors at bay. And now the Newbury Street shop is the only place in the U.S. to score knit garments that are 3-D printed on site. Choose the colors, buttons and cuffs, and you'll be wearing a seamless knit blazer in 90 minutes.

Consignment

COVET

Owner Hanadi Hamzeh tripled the size of her award-winning consignment store by moving two doors down earlier this year. But even though Covet now occupies 1,300 square feet, the selection remains carefully edited, stocking high-end labels like Chanel and Christian Louboutin and on-trend brands like Free People and Alice + Olivia. The new dress section is massive, and Hamzeh has also added athleisure and luxury sections, making for even more ways to score big savings.

Dynamic Duo

JESSICA KNEZ AND JOSEPH MORRISSEY OF ALL TOO HUMAN

Thanks to All Too Human owner Jessica Knez, a former Bergdorf Goodman buyer, and partner Joseph Morrissey, Riccardi's former creative director, Boston is ditching its "worst dressed" rep. Since their boutique opened last spring, they've been bringing in exclusive finds and fashion-forward looks for men and women, tapping big names like Proenza Schouler and emerging brands like Alyx and Baja East. The 2,500-square-foot space also functions as an art gallery—a recent Delpozo x Sweet Saba collaboration provided a window display of sugary designs that looked good enough to eat.

New Addition

HEIST BY DECEMBER THIEVES

The edgy sister of playful accessories shop December Thieves stole our hearts. Lana Barakat has done it again with this curated boutique of global fashion and gifts. There are vegetable-tanned leather bags and horn-and-stone jewelry from Paris, shoes handcrafted in Berlin and funky apparel from the likes of Japan's UCF and Toronto's Nuit. And props to neighborhood florist Rouvalis for crafting the gorgeous moss wall, complete with ceramic bugs by a Portuguese artist.

FINALLY, AN EYEBROW TATTOO THAT LOOKS NATURAL!

Mila Kaluk, Owner and Cosmetic tattoo Artist at BrowMuse

There is a new beauty trend taking over - Microblading. Microblading is a semi-permanent eyebrow tattoo that is done using a unique hand tool which allows the creation of the finest hair like strokes. Unlike the traditional tattooing, Microblading is the most gentle form of eyebrow tattoo and looks very natural.

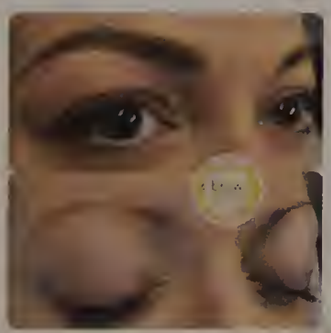
Upon looking for the best artist in Boston and New York, BrowMuse comes highly recommended. Mila Kaluk is the owner and cosmetic tattoo artist at BrowMuse.

Q: When did you first realize you want to use your artistic skills in cosmetic tattooing industry?

Mila: Beauty has always been my passion. I had my brows tattooed in the past with the traditional tattooing method. My eyebrows were shapeless, skinny, and flaming red for years. I learned my lesson and did my research. I booked my appointment with the best technician in Moscow who was using the hair stroke method and it changed my life!

Q: What would you say to anyone who is nervous about microblading their brows?

Mila: Though it may seem like an intimidating procedure, microblading is the most gentle form of tattooing. I use high quality mineral pigments that I implant in the very top layer of the dermis of your skin. That is why this type of tattooing will fade over time and not cause scarring. Before the procedure, we have a consultation on your brow design to get the clients desired shape. The procedure is not painful. I use a topical anesthetic to numb the skin. I have even had clients fall asleep while I work!



Q: What advise would you give to someone who is considering microblading?

Mila: Do your research! Make sure that the artist has the proper certifications and licensing. Be mindful of the city in Massachusetts that the artist is working in. Some towns in Massachusetts do not require a license to perform tattooing, which could put your health at risk. Make sure you see a large portfolio of before and after pictures, including healed results. Check for consistency in their work. I do not recommend finding a groupon type. A good artist is a busy artist. Your face is not the place to save money.

Q: I'm impressed by your microblading work! What are you most proud of as a business owner, and what sets you a part?

Mila: It is the unique approach I take on eyebrow design that is based not only on measurements but are customize to the client's lifestyle. BrowMuse is proud to be the first studio to offer HD eyebrow microblading, and Mister Brow, tailored microblading for men. I also recently opened a Manhattan location on Madison Avenue, so my clients can get my service in New York or Boston.

Jewelry Designer

APRIL SODERSTROM

A former Miss Massachusetts USA competitor, designer April Soderstrom has cornered the market on sparkly pageant bling that's been sported on stage by recent queens. But glitter isn't the only reason the designer has been the talk of the town—she's also a pro at crafting featherweight ear hooks and hoops, layering lariats and chokers and starting arm parties of beads and tassels. If Julian Edelman and Gisele are giving you Instagram shoutouts, you're doing something (or everything) right.

BEANTOWN

This versatile 11-piece outfit has performed for two Patriots Super Bowl parties and been featured in Mick Jagger's short-lived HBO series Vinyl, but for founder Tim Wilson, the most significant gig is always a wedding. "It's one of the most important days in a couple's life," says the keyboard player. "We have just one chance to get it right—no do-overs!" Beantown takes just one break for each four-hour party to keep it rockin' all night long, but you've got to act fast: The band books up for Saturdays almost two years in advance.

Local Flavor

You won't find plush lobsters or Boston baked beans at this charming shop, which stands out amid a sea of more tourist-focused options at Faneuil Hall. Don't get us wrong: Named for the year the city was founded, 1630 is packed with potential souvenirs, but most are vintage finds or made by local artists. And between Victorian postcards, MBTA token cufflinks and barnacle-covered treasures found in Boston Harbor, the goods tend to attract locals as well.

Meal Kit
AL FRESHCO

This meal kit service blends a trifecta of feel-good ingredients: sustainable packaging, local produce and delivery via bicycle. Owner Laurel Valchuis was inspired to create meal kits while working on an organic farm in Ireland, where she took home extra zucchini to avoid waste. Today, her business assembles kits with New England vegetables for meals like carrot radish fritters and chili with blue corn bread and delivers them to homes, offices and pick-up locations in neighborhoods across Boston and Cambridge.

Pet Resort

THE URBAN HOUND

The Urban Hound has come a long way from its one-person dog-walking roots. Today, the biz caters to its canine clientele with a doggy hotel that accommodates 50, custom training packages, day care services and indulgent grooming treatments. Despite its growth during the past decade, the staff keeps a "staying small" mindset, providing one-on-one attention to the animals whenever possible and still focusing on those daily walks—existing South End and Back Bay routes will soon be joined by runs in Southie.

Moving Company

MOZART MOVING COMPANY

Having your TV arrive on time—without any scratches—is usually enough to give a moving company a passing grade. But Boston-based Mozart Moving Company does even more heavy lifting, offering clients two weeks of free storage and sending out thoughtful handwritten thank-you notes after each job. Throw in a convenient online interface that helps customers easily generate quotes and book appointments, and it's no wonder we're singing their praises.

Museum Shop

THE ICA STORE

Forget about merely exiting through the gift shop; the ICA Store is a destination in its own right. It's packed with pieces related to past and present exhibitions, like limited-edition Amy Sillman vases and Nari Ward plates, beautiful art books (including one boasting a heat-sensitive color-changing cover and pheromone-laced ink), artisans' handmade creations—such as cement planters cast from real heads of cabbage—and plenty of pretty pencils and notebooks to inspire your own creativity. Don't miss special finds at summertime pop-ups during ICA First Friday events, as well as trunk shows with local vendors in the fall.

THE LOCAL FARE

Gourmands should gravitate to this Arlington space co-founded by the ladies behind Nutty Life nut-based milks, Kitchen Millie two-bite cookies and Boston Bonbon mini desserts. The Local Fare functions as both a shared kitchen for startups and a specialty food shop, so stock up on locally made grub such as pickled veggies, grass-fed beef jerky, vegan chocolates, herbal tea blends made with mushrooms or curated gift boxes for a bit of everything.

Plant Shop

NICHE

City dwellers can instantly add life to their digs with a visit to Niche, which offers a diverse selection of perennials, herbs, annuals and vegetables—not to mention pottery, soils and fertilizers—at a cozy shop in the South End and a larger space with a new outdoor garden in Cambridge. No green thumb? No problem. Niche takes a hands-on approach with design consultations, installations and monthly workshops covering topics like seeds, terrariums and air plants.

Reason to Dabble in the Occult

HAUSWITCH HOME + HEALING

Channeling Salem's witchy spirit with a playful feminist flair, this sunlit shop stocks signature spell kits—like Open Window, for banishing negative energy from your abode—along with ceramic cauldrons, crystal candles and beautifully illustrated tarot cards. Owner Erica Feldmann hosts spellcrafting workshops and guided meditations every full and new moon, but even skeptics will be fans of finds like "spooky bitch" pins and totes, screen-printed pillows, beeswax candles, art prints and a selection of books and zines.

Running Store

HEARTBREAK HILL RUNNING COMPANY

Founded by former Boston College track and field captains, this "all things running" store offers personalized fittings with gait analysis to prepare runners to safely sprint through the streets. Not a fan of the great outdoors? The Cambridge location's Heartbreak Studio has students sweating on treadmills in organized classes. Individual cardio coaching from elite instructors is also available, and runners can opt to join the Heartbreakers, a local running group for all ability levels that receives weekly motivation from co-founder Dan Fitzgerald.

Stationery Shop

CALLIOPE PAPERIE

The art of snail mail is alive and well in Natick thanks to this shop, which stocks stationery with a distinct attitude, much of it locally designed. One best-seller reads: "Let's get this party started because I would really love to be in bed by 11." Another design depicts "The Joy of Painting with Rick Ross." A renovated storefront reopens this summer, but letterheads can also score Calliope's stationery online and at the SoWa Market on the last Sunday of every month.

Tattoo Parlor

GOOD FAITH TATTOO

Fear not, first-timers: The name of this Allston shop says it all. The Good Faith team of Chris Barnett, Nicholas McEvoy, Victor Kensinger, Brian MacNeil and Johannes has produced everything from elaborate sleeves and back pieces saturated with color to delicate lines of poetry and intricate hamsas. Whether you opt for something traditional, neo-traditional, Japanese or realistic, rest assured that your ink will sport precise lines and quality shading—and make you eager to come back for more.

AGENDA for 7/5–7/25

That's Amore!

Get sauced at a pizza festival.

WARNING: WHAT you are about to read may cause drooling, spontaneous shouts of excitement and hunger pangs. Ready? The inaugural Boston Pizza Festival is taking over City Hall Plaza! Thirty Italian pizza ovens will spin out fresh pies made by 24 local and international restaurants—including Mast', Regina Pizzeria, Antico Forno and Serafina. And with the mayor of Naples flying in for an appearance with our own Marty Walsh, you know the 'za is going to be authentic. Plus, there will be live music and beer and wine for sale to wash down the gooey, chewy goodness. Bring your appetite when the event hits City Hall Plaza on July 8 and 9. / Alexandra Cavallo

The Boston Pizza Festival runs from 11 am to 10 pm on July 8 and 9 at City Hall Plaza Boston. $15. bostonpizzafestival.com

DOROTHY WHO?

Do summer temps have you howling, "I'm melting, I'm melting"? Beat the heat at the Boston Opera House, where the backstory of the H2O-averse witch who made that line famous is currently taking center stage in Wicked. The Tony-winning musical, based on local author Gregory Maguire's best-selling book of the same name, serves as a prequel to and retelling of The Wizard of Oz, following the two unlikely friends who would grow up to be Glinda the Good Witch and the—quite misunderstood, as it turns out—Wicked Witch of the West. Fall under Wicked's spell before it closes its run on July 23. / Alexandra Cavallo

FORCE OF HABIT Deemed "pure trash" by the Catholic League, The Little Hours embraces condemnable comedy as a not-so-religious romp informed by director Jeff Baena's college days. Having graduated from NYU with a minor in medieval and renaissance studies, he's loosely based the film on a tale from 14th-century author Giovanni Boccaccio's The Decameron. As three nuns (Alison Brie, Kate Micucci and Aubrey Plaza) confess their desires to a servant-in-hiding (Dave Franco)—whose deaf-mute disguise falsely ensures their confidentiality—sodomy, substance abuse and sins galore fill the screen. Say your prayers when the movie gets its area premiere at the Brattle Theatre on July 7-13. / Haley Hill PHOTO COURTESY OF DESTRO FILMS

Baby Driver ★★1/2 British filmmaker Edgar Wright, the director/co-writer behind the "Three Flavors Cornetto Trilogy" (2004's Shaun of the Dead, 2007's Hot Fuzz and 2013's The World's End), has expanded a three-and-a-half-minute music video he made for Mint Royale's "Blue Song" into a nearly two-hour movie. As is usual for Wright, that's about 20 minutes too long. What's unusual, however, is the relative lack of laughs, which have taken a backseat to the film's sense of style. In other words, if you're a fan of Wright's Scott Pilgrim vs. the World, then this movie's tale of a baby-faced young getaway driver who drowns out his tinnitus with classic hits he pipes in through earbuds from an endless supply of iPods will likely be right up your alley. I found it a bit inert. Ansel Elgort puts pedal to the metal as the supernaturally gifted motorist named, yes, Baby, who has dance moves to match his driving skills but only half the entertainment value of Wright favorite Simon Pegg. When he meets cute by comparing song titles with Debora (Lily James), the waitress of his dreams, he wants out of the criminal life. Alas, the local crime boss (an oddly paternal Kevin Spacey) won't let him go so easily—not when there's a pretty young girl he and a bank robber (menacingly well-played by Jon Hamm) can threaten as a means of keeping Baby on the road. Race to get the soundtrack, but use caution when deciding to see the film; mileage will vary. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Bad Batch ★★1/2 It's a man-eat-man world in writer/director Ana Lily Amirpour's second film, her follow-up to A Girl Walks Home Alone at Night, her 2014 tale of a lonesome vampire. That film's cool black-and-white cinematography has been replaced by a much warmer, scorched-earth color palette that'd be right at home in a Mad Max movie. In fact, Amirpour borrows quite liberally from George Miller's post-apocalyptic milieu, though she's less successful once she gets past her setup. Arlen (Suki Waterhouse) has been deemed part of society's basket of deplorables, a "Bad Batch" dumped into a Texas wasteland to fend for themselves. It doesn't take long for the 20-something to be captured and chained by others in the same predicament, who promptly saw off her right arm and leg so that muscle-heads like Miami Man (future Aquaman Jason Momoa) will have some fresh meat to cook and eat. Yes, Amirpour has moved on from hip vampires to fine young cannibals. The movie is fun for a while. There are grisly pleasures to be had as we figure out how this world works and we're introduced to supporting players like Jim Carrey, whose bearded hermit aids the escaped Arlen on her way to the makeshift town of Comfort, which is run by a cultish leader named Rockwell, played by Keanu Reeves in a bathrobe and a pervy mustache. Amirpour has the visual and aural details down; it's a shame she doesn't have more to say. (At Coolidge Corner.)

Beatriz at Dinner ★★★1/2 This long-overdue reunion of journeyman director Miguel Arteta and writer Mike White, who last collaborated on 2000's Chuck & Buck and 2002's The Good Girl, begins as a comedy of manners but ends up somewhere more profound. Salma Hayek plays Beatriz, easily the best role she's had since starring in Julie Taymor's Frida Kahlo biography 15 years ago. Though a lesser film might be content to simply set up the put-upon immigrant as the foil for her well-to-do hosts and their guests, Arteta and White also establish Beatriz as a very particular type of West Coast character, a spiritual guide and massage therapist who cares for the sick while neglecting herself. Single, middle-aged and mourning the recent murder of one of her pet goats, she's on a visit with one of her clients, Cathy (Connie Britton), when her Volkswagen breaks down. Stranded at a luxurious Newport Beach estate, the holistic healer is invited to stay for dinner, which doesn't sit too well with Cathy's husband, Grant (David Warshofsky). He's focused on impressing a young couple (Chloë Sevigny and Jay Duplass) and his guest of honor, billionaire real-estate developer Doug Strutt (John Lithgow in Donald Trump mode), who may have more in common with Beatriz than it first seems. While the ending might be a bit of a misstep, Arteta gets good mileage out of the physical discrepancy between Hayek and Lithgow (she's 5-foot-2 to his 6-foot-4). But it's the idealistic differences that cause the sparks to fly. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Beguiled ★★★ Colin Farrell's a fine actor, but a whole different beast than Clint Eastwood, who played Cpl. John McBurney in Don Siegel's Civil War-set curio The Beguiled. Like the 1966 Thomas Cullinan novel it was based on, that film featured an injured Union soldier who seduces a school full of repressed Southern belles of all ages as they nurse him back to health, until he pays dearly for his transgressions. Now, writer/director Sofia Coppola has taken her own crack at adapting Cullinan's book, and the results are spare (a supporting slave character has controversially been excised) and far less lurid. Which isn't to say that there aren't pleasures to be had. Like all of Coppola's pictures, it's been sumptuously lit and photographed (on film!), this time by the very talented Philippe Le Sourd, who last shot Wong Kar-wai's gorgeous The Grandmaster. She's also teamed up for the third time with her Marie Antoinette star, Kirsten Dunst, who plays Edwina, a shy schoolmarm who longs to be swept away by Farrell's handsome stranger—but she'll have competition from the likes of Martha (Nicole Kidman), the school's headmistress, and even hormonal teen Alicia (Elle Fanning). But as suggested by the cannon fire and smoke in the distance, violence threatens to enter the frame at any moment. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Big Sick ★★★1/2 This film inspired by the real-life courtship of stand-up comedian Kumail Nanjiani and therapist-turned-writer Emily V. Gordon shouldn't be judged by its poster. Based on the promotional image that shows the Pakistani funnyman and his lily-white American sweetheart (played, fetchingly, by Zoe Kazan) posed in front of their culturally mismatched families, I was expecting a big-screen sitcom. But then, perhaps I was subliminally responding to the presence of Ray Romano as the onscreen Emily's dad. Nevertheless, I underestimated him like I underestimated the rest of this film from director Michael Showalter. Sure, it has laughs (it's a Judd Apatow production, after all), and the opening act is a bit of a sitcom, with all the standard tropes of boy meets girl, boy sleeps with girl, boy realizes he's girl's Uber driver when she orders a post-coital ride home from his apartment. But the titular sickness takes the film in unexpected directions. After cultural differences drive our leads apart, Emily unexpectedly slips into a coma, and Kumail gradually gets to know her distraught parents (Romano and Holly Hunter, both very fine), who initially want nothing to do with him. Funny and touching, The Big Sick is a genuine crowd-pleaser of real emotional power. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

A Ghost Story ★★★★ On my way out of writer/director David Lowery's latest, I overheard a colleague referring to it as "Terrence Malick's A Ghost Story." Clearly, he hadn't seen Lowery's earlier feature, 2013's Ain't Them Bodies Saints, which paired Casey Affleck and Rooney Mara in an impressionistic tale set in the Texas badlands, centered on an outlaw prison escapee attempting to reunite with his wife and the daughter he's never met. Lacking a traditional narrative structure or conventional dialogue, filled with non-linear editing and shots of nature, it was as Malick as you can get. In other words, it was as unfriendly to general audiences as Lowery's next film—an incredibly lovely, very loose remake of Disney's Pete's Dragon—was accessible to all who saw it, which sadly wasn't many. Still, we should thank whoever it was at Disney who had the foresight to roll the dice on him, since he used his paycheck from the Mouse House to fund his latest experimental feature, an ethereal pleasure that once again features Affleck and Mara as unnamed lovers—until one of them dies in a car accident. Yes, Affleck plays a ghost, complete with a white sheet draped over his body. Is it silly? Sure. But if you're

Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 ★★★ Unlike most, I was a bit immune to the supposed charms of writer/director James Gunn's Guardians of the Galaxy when Marvel Studios' big experiment wowed audiences back in the summer of 2014. Granted, I'd already been experiencing a certain fatigue from Marvel's typical superhero fare, but I was rather looking forward to the Disney division's dip into what promised to be some atypically psychedelic sci-fi fun at the hands of Gunn, who'd cut his teeth toiling on exploitation films for legendary schlock studio Troma. And while I didn't necessarily dislike the picture Gunn constructed, I found Guardians to be a curiously flat though visually inventive picture. So perhaps it's due to the familiarity I feel from returning to the characters of Peter Quill, err...Star-Lord (Chris Pratt), Gamora (Zoe Saldana), Drax the Destroyer (Dave Bautista), Groot (Vin Diesel) and Rocket Raccoon (Bradley Cooper), but I actually enjoyed Gunn's second outing with the Guardians more than the first, even if the adventure they find themselves in is a bit disjointed and sloppy. There isn't so much of an overriding plot as there is the simple pleasure of watching (and listening to) a well-oiled team banter about while they encounter Peter's long-lost dad, Ego (Kurt Russell), a perfect name for one of these characters if ever there was one. (In the suburbs.)

The Hero ★★★ If there's one thing director Brett Haley and his writing partner Marc Basch are great at, it's creating terrific roles for the septuagenarian set. Take their 2015 hidden gem I'll See You in My Dreams, a comedic drama that starred Blythe Danner and showcased veteran character actor Sam Elliott as her love interest. But it's in Haley's latest, a delightful if derivative comedic drama, that Elliott plays the role of a lifetime. The romantic lead and star of the picture, he has an easygoing grin and a twinkle in his eye that make his character's buried emotional depth all the more powerful when it's revealed. Elliott plays Lee Hayden, an actor whose successes are long behind him—and when he's offered a lifetime achievement award, he realizes he's nearing the end. How near, he couldn't have imagined, however, since his next piece of news is the pancreatic cancer diagnosis that provides the dramatic engine that drives the film. The existential crisis that follows finds Lee hiding his illness from those closest to him and denying it even to himself as he struggles with his legacy—or perceived lack of one. Soon, Lee's spending his days (and nights) with a woman (Laura Prepon) not much older than his daughter as he gradually comes to discover what's important. Haley displays a deft touch here you won't often find in films starring actors half Elliott's age. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Mummy ★1/2 The title may read The Mummy, but don't be fooled: This is Universal Pictures' attempt to kick-start a new franchise of "Dark Universe" films populated by many of their classic monsters (still to come: Javier Bardem's Frankenstein's Monster and Johnny Depp's Invisible Man). It's also 54-year-old Tom Cruise's bald-faced attempt to remain relevant by jumping into the young man's franchise game. It's a dismal failure. Cruise headlines as Nick Morton, and for the first time in his oeuvre, it's a role that could have been portrayed by anyone; Nick's adventurer/dealer of antiquities (i.e., he's a thief) is the most generic of antiheroes, a wholly unlikable dumb jock who only cares for himself. Jake Johnson (TV's New Girl) attempts to bring some life to the proceedings as Nick's comic sidekick, Chris Vail—but he's killed off almost immediately. Still, that doesn't stop him from periodically appearing in front of Nick as a rotting corpse spouting narrative-propelling exposition. Clearly, director Alex Kurtzman (2012's People Like Us) and his army of writers also looked to 1981's An American Werewolf in London when they raided Universal's vaults for inspiration. Meanwhile, Nick also has his hands full juggling two women, archaeologist Jenny Halsey (Annabelle's Annabelle Wallis) and centuries-old mummified princess Ahmanet (Kingsman: The Secret Service's Sofia Boutella), who wants to turn him into the living embodiment of Egyptian god Set. That's certainly one way of achieving onscreen immortality. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Men Tell No Tales ★★ The latest film in Disney's sinking franchise may be the shortest of all five, but it feels like the longest. Norwegian co-directors Joachim Rønning and Espen Sandberg are a step up from Rob Marshall, who brought the chintzy excess of his movie musicals (Chicago, Into the Woods) to 2011's On Stranger Tides (still the series' weakest entry), but the duo nonetheless lacks the flair for over-the-top comic action that Gore Verbinski brought to the original trilogy (think Buster Keaton, but with a blockbuster budget). Like Verbinski though, Rønning and Sandberg recognize that Johnny Depp's Captain Jack Sparrow is best deployed as he was originally billed: a sidekick and comic foil to the main action. Unfortunately, Henry (Brenton Thwaites)—the adult son of the original trilogy's Will Turner (Orlando Bloom) and Elizabeth Swann (Keira Knightley)—and accused witch Carina Smyth (Kaya Scodelario) have little of the chemistry that sparked Turner and Swann's courtship. But thankfully, there's still a decent villain to put some wind into the film's sails: Academy Award winner Javier Bardem steals the show as Captain Salazar. An undead pirate who drowned in the Devil's Triangle, he sails the high seas in his shipwreck, his black hair swirling around his cracked visage as though he were still underwater. Yarrr, if only the rest of this rehash were nearly as creative. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Wonder Woman ★★★ Leave it to women to show the men how it's done. Patty Jenkins, who's been quietly directing television since making her impressive entry with 2003's Monster, has pulled a superb performance out of Israeli actress Gal Gadot, who stars as Diana Prince/Wonder Woman, a DC Comics character poised to become more popular on cinema screens than even Superman. But then, the bar has been set pretty low by Warner Bros.' previous superhero pictures, beginning with 2013's little-loved Man of Steel and continuing through the critical disasters of 2016's grim and grimy blockbusters, Batman v Superman: Dawn of Justice and Suicide Squad. Jenkins' film is not only brighter, but it offers an honest-to-gosh authorial voice, thanks to her assured direction and a script credited to a lone screenwriter, sometime comic book scribe Allan Heinberg, creator of TV's The Catch. An action movie, a romance, a period piece and a war movie, set during the waning days of World War I, the result is an optimistic piece of pop filmmaking reminiscent of Richard Donner's magnificent Superman from 1978. And though it doesn't soar to quite the same heights, it should satisfy both little girls and grown women alike, whiny fanboys be damned. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

IN HIS ELEMENT. Religion, race, Fox News—rap wunderkind Kendrick Lamar covers them all in his fourth studio album, DAMN. Fans of the cerebral Compton-bred rapper have ridden along on his swift rise to superstardom, a feat Lamar has achieved while seeming to effortlessly balance the glittery lure of mega-success with a commitment to social justice. Lamar hit a career high this year, tearing up airwaves with the highest-charting single of his solo career, "HUMBLE." Whether it's for his effortless flow or his tireless sense of social awareness, or both, catch Lamar at the peak of his tour on July 22, when he headlines TD Garden. / Cleo Harrington

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

PIÈCES DE RÉSISTANCE

The ladies doth protest—along with other activists—at the MIT List Visual Arts Center, which unveils its exhibit Civil Disobedience on July 18. The show explores political resistance in the 20th and 21st centuries through citizen journalism and news footage, posters from MIT students standing up to the Vietnam War and work from filmmakers like Patricia Silva, whose Mass Swell (seen above) captures demonstrations in Ferguson after the killing of Michael Brown. The exhibit is on display through Oct. 29, but in the meantime, don't miss out on Thursday screenings of docs like I Am Not Your Negro and Citizenfour as well as free workshops on effecting change through art led by installation artist Kate Gilbert. / Sarah Hagman

INTERIOR ARCHITECTURE

The tap room at Notch Brewery in Salem reinforces Notch's brand — relaxed and warm, with a sense of place. Rough-sown shiplap paneling, painted steel, holophane lamping, reclaimed lumber, polished concrete floors, and custom wall murals make for an unselfconscious and welcoming space. Ideate Design Studio is proud to have been a part of the team that won Historic Salem Inc.'s 2017 Preservation Award.

OSTRA offers contemporary Mediterranean cuisine in Boston's Back Bay

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hard-wood charcoal grilling year round.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Ed Robinson's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars, Clubs & Lounges

IT'S ALL RELATIVE

Anyone who ever carried one of those little orange collection boxes for UNICEF while trick-or-treating on Halloween would've been blown away by the charity's Children's Champion Award Dinner at The Castle at Park Plaza.

Guests were greeted by a wall containing 16,000 multicolored scrolls, representing the number of children who die every day of preventable causes. Kids from around the world had written their greatest fear upon them, and attendees were asked to each take one and replace it with their own. After the cocktail reception, dinner was served and a live auction ensued, helping the event to raise upward of a million and a quarter smackeroos. On hand: honoree Yo-Yo Ma and his arts consultant wife, Jill Hornor, honorees and philanthropic giants Alli and Bill Achtmeyer, co-chairs Bryan Rafanelli and his political operative husband, Mark Walsh, co-chair and incomparable beauty Kerry Swords and her handsome husband, Brendan, Congressman Joe Kennedy and his better half, Beth, presidential adviser David Gergen, the perfectly lovely Joanne Rogers (widow of the iconic PBS children's show host), real estate sex bomb Michael Harper, ink-stained wretch Ben Mezrich and the flawless Tonya, Weston party pair Debbie and Bob First, Channel 5 beauty Rhondella Richardson, Persian stunner Maryam Rahmani, up-and-coming shutterbug Lucy Lyons and one person who declared, "Vodka has no calories."

The evening's best comment: When the bidding on an auction item opened at $15,000, one attendee mumbled, "I don't think I paid 15 grand for my car."

CUT, COLOR, CLARITY, CARAT AND KILLING

During the infamous art heist in 1990, the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum lost Vermeer's masterpiece The Concert, but rather than dwell on what's missing, the museum chose to concentrate on what's present with a party by the same name.

The Concert: A Summer Soirée featured cocktails in the new wing, followed by performances throughout the museum by musicians playing everything from the lute, harpsichord, banjo and steel guitar to the oud, shamisen and kora (look them up).

Among the revelers: soon-to-be newlyweds Stephen O'Connor and Jacquelyn-Kate Rosenfeld, the ridiculously handsome Andrew Mann, white-hot fashion plate Josh Trinh, outgoing Boston Conservatory head Richard Ortner, iconoclastic Brahmin Linda Cabot Black, the unsinkable Doris Yaffe, Janet "Princess Zhanay" Goff, percussionist Maria Finkelmeier and her photographer husband, Adam DeTour, Cambridge intellectual Rebecca Nemser and museum director Peggy Fogelman, who was as gracious a hostess as Mrs. Jack in her day.

It's difficult to imagine a more idyllic evening, full of such delightful surprises as a group of people admiring a tapestry depicting fornicating rabbits, which prompted one of them to say, "Who knew the old saying was true?" However, the party's best exchange came when a man complimented a woman on an alarmingly large gem she was wearing, to which she replied, "It's not just a ring. It's a lethal weapon."

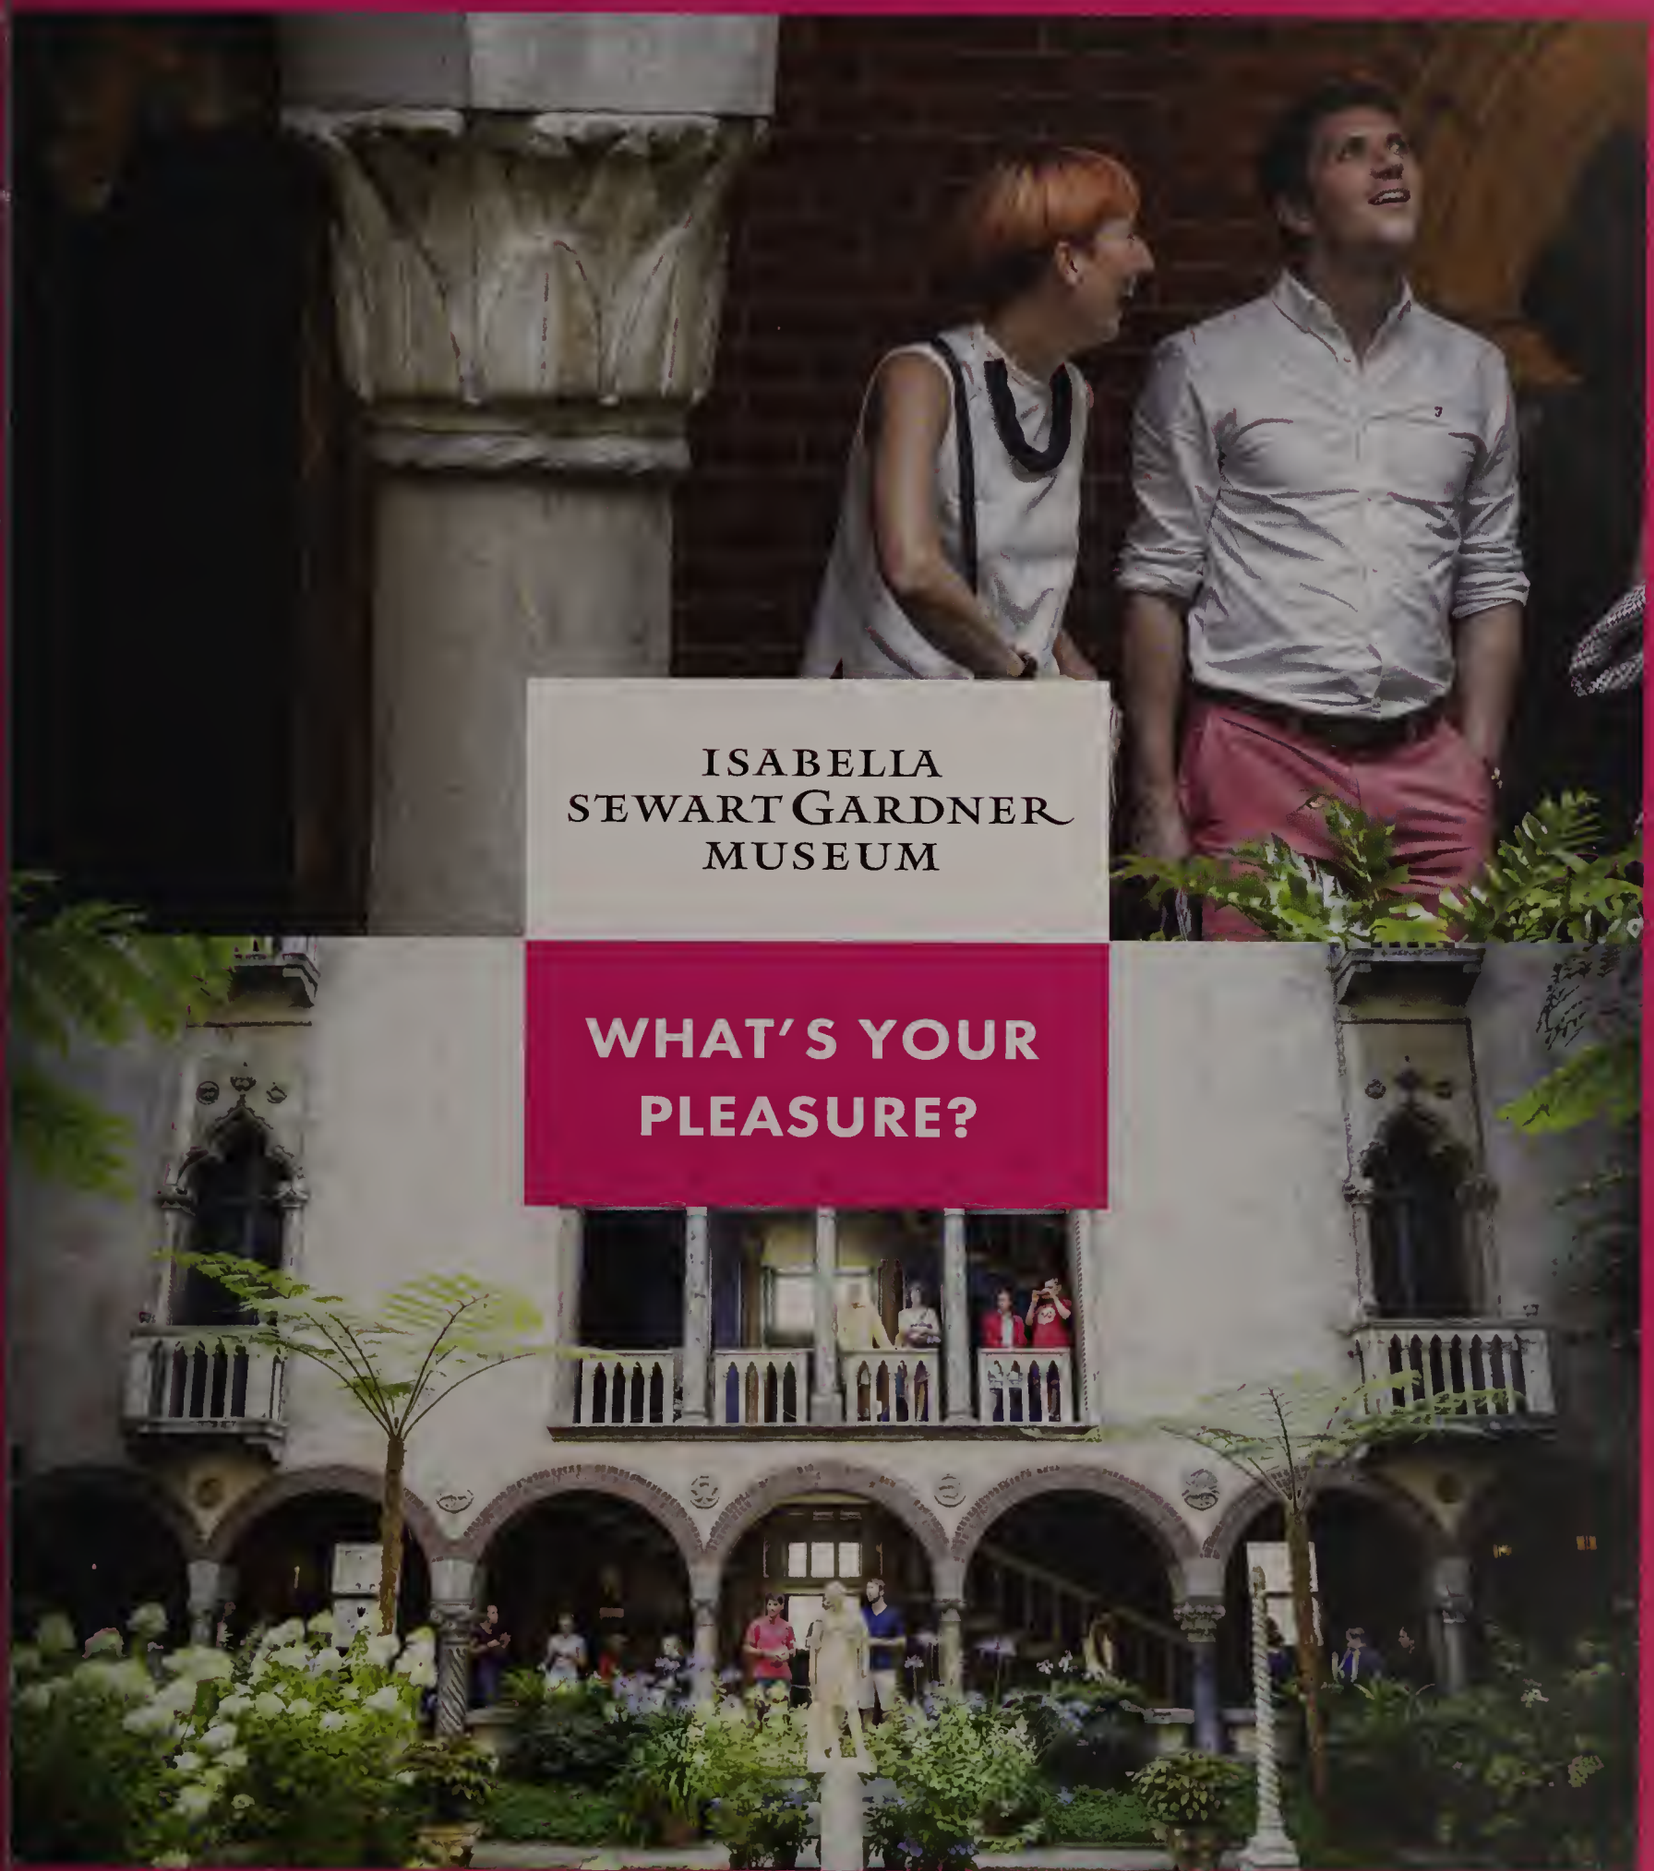
STEPPIN' OUT

Q: How many gorgeous, beautifully dressed people can you fit into the Cyclorama? A: However many attended the BCA Ball and Disco Under the Dome, two super-sexy parties under the same roof, both to raise money for the Boston Center for the Arts.

Spotted among the crowd: Boston Ballet principal dancer John Lam and his adoring other half, John Ruggieri, absurdly gorgeous duo Juan Carlos Gonzalez and Greg Faux, the dashing and debonair Gustavo Quiroga, genius choreographer Yury Yanowsky and his prima ballerina, Kathleen Breen Combes, fashion plate Mona Kumar, real estate hottie Jamie Curtis, moving mogul J.J. Przybylski, professional do-gooder Jacques Abatto and his handsome other half, David Goldman, Our Lady of Chanel Mary Nobile-King, florist to the stars Jimmy Guzman, arts patrons Jody and Erik Saarmaa, gallery hottie Camilo Alvarez, countless bearded hipsters and others too fabulous to mention.

"What are you doing for the summer?" asked one guest, to which the response was: "So far, wearing winter clothing."

However, the best comment came from the effusive greeting between two gay men, one of whom said, "The last time I saw you was for drinks behind my husband's back!"



IF LINKEDIN HAD A HEAVEN

CEOs, captains of industry, financial giants and business titans flocked to Symphony Hall for the 36th iteration of Presidents at Pops, the marquee evening that celebrates the partnership between the corporate community and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Seen rubbing elbows at the pre-concert cocktail reception were the likes of brokerage bigwig and the evening's honoree, Dick Connolly, banking babes Dyan Goodwin and Dora Lewin, concessions gazillionaire Joe O'Donnell, power couple Holly and David Bruce, legal eagle Paul Ayoub, Cambridge doyenne RoAnn Costin, construction mogul John Fish, investment guru Joe McNay, liquor giant Carmine Martignetti, power chick Geri Denterlein, Aquarium hottie Andrew Royer, PR czarina Kate Shamon, real estate titan Peter Palandjian, statuesque exec Katherine Chapman Stemberg and one person who said, "You know you're from Wellesley when you bump into someone and say, 'I only ever see you at the dump!'"

The gourmet boxed dinner was delicious, the concert—featuring Tony Award winner Leslie Odom Jr.—was a delight, and the event raised a boatload of money for the BSO. Best comment of the evening: "When it comes to interior design, salmon is only an acceptable color in Palm Beach or Bermuda. End of story." ◆

FEEL THE NOISE

IT SEEMS LIKE SONGS STICK TO summer more than any other season. (I can even tell you exactly what I was listening to in July of 1997—though I'd rather not because my taste as a tween was pretty terrible.) If you're still looking for a summer-defining jam, this issue has you covered. For our lead feature, Paul Robicheau rounds up 10 local acts of note right now who span a fascinating range, from a garage-country singer who started out in opera to a one-man band whose instruments include salvaged junk and a box of bones. Check out the full lineup on page 36. Elsewhere, Lydia Santangelo offers a spread of stage-ready fashions. Alexandra Cavallo visits the Somerville studio of a couple who make custom guitars that are as easy on the eyes as they are on the ears. And Jonathan Soroff catches up with our cover subject, Speedy Ortiz frontwoman, solo artist and all-around badass Sadie Dupuis. Happy reading—and listening.

GUITAR HEROES

A MUSICAL COUPLE CRAFTS CUSTOM INSTRUMENTS IN SOMERVILLE.

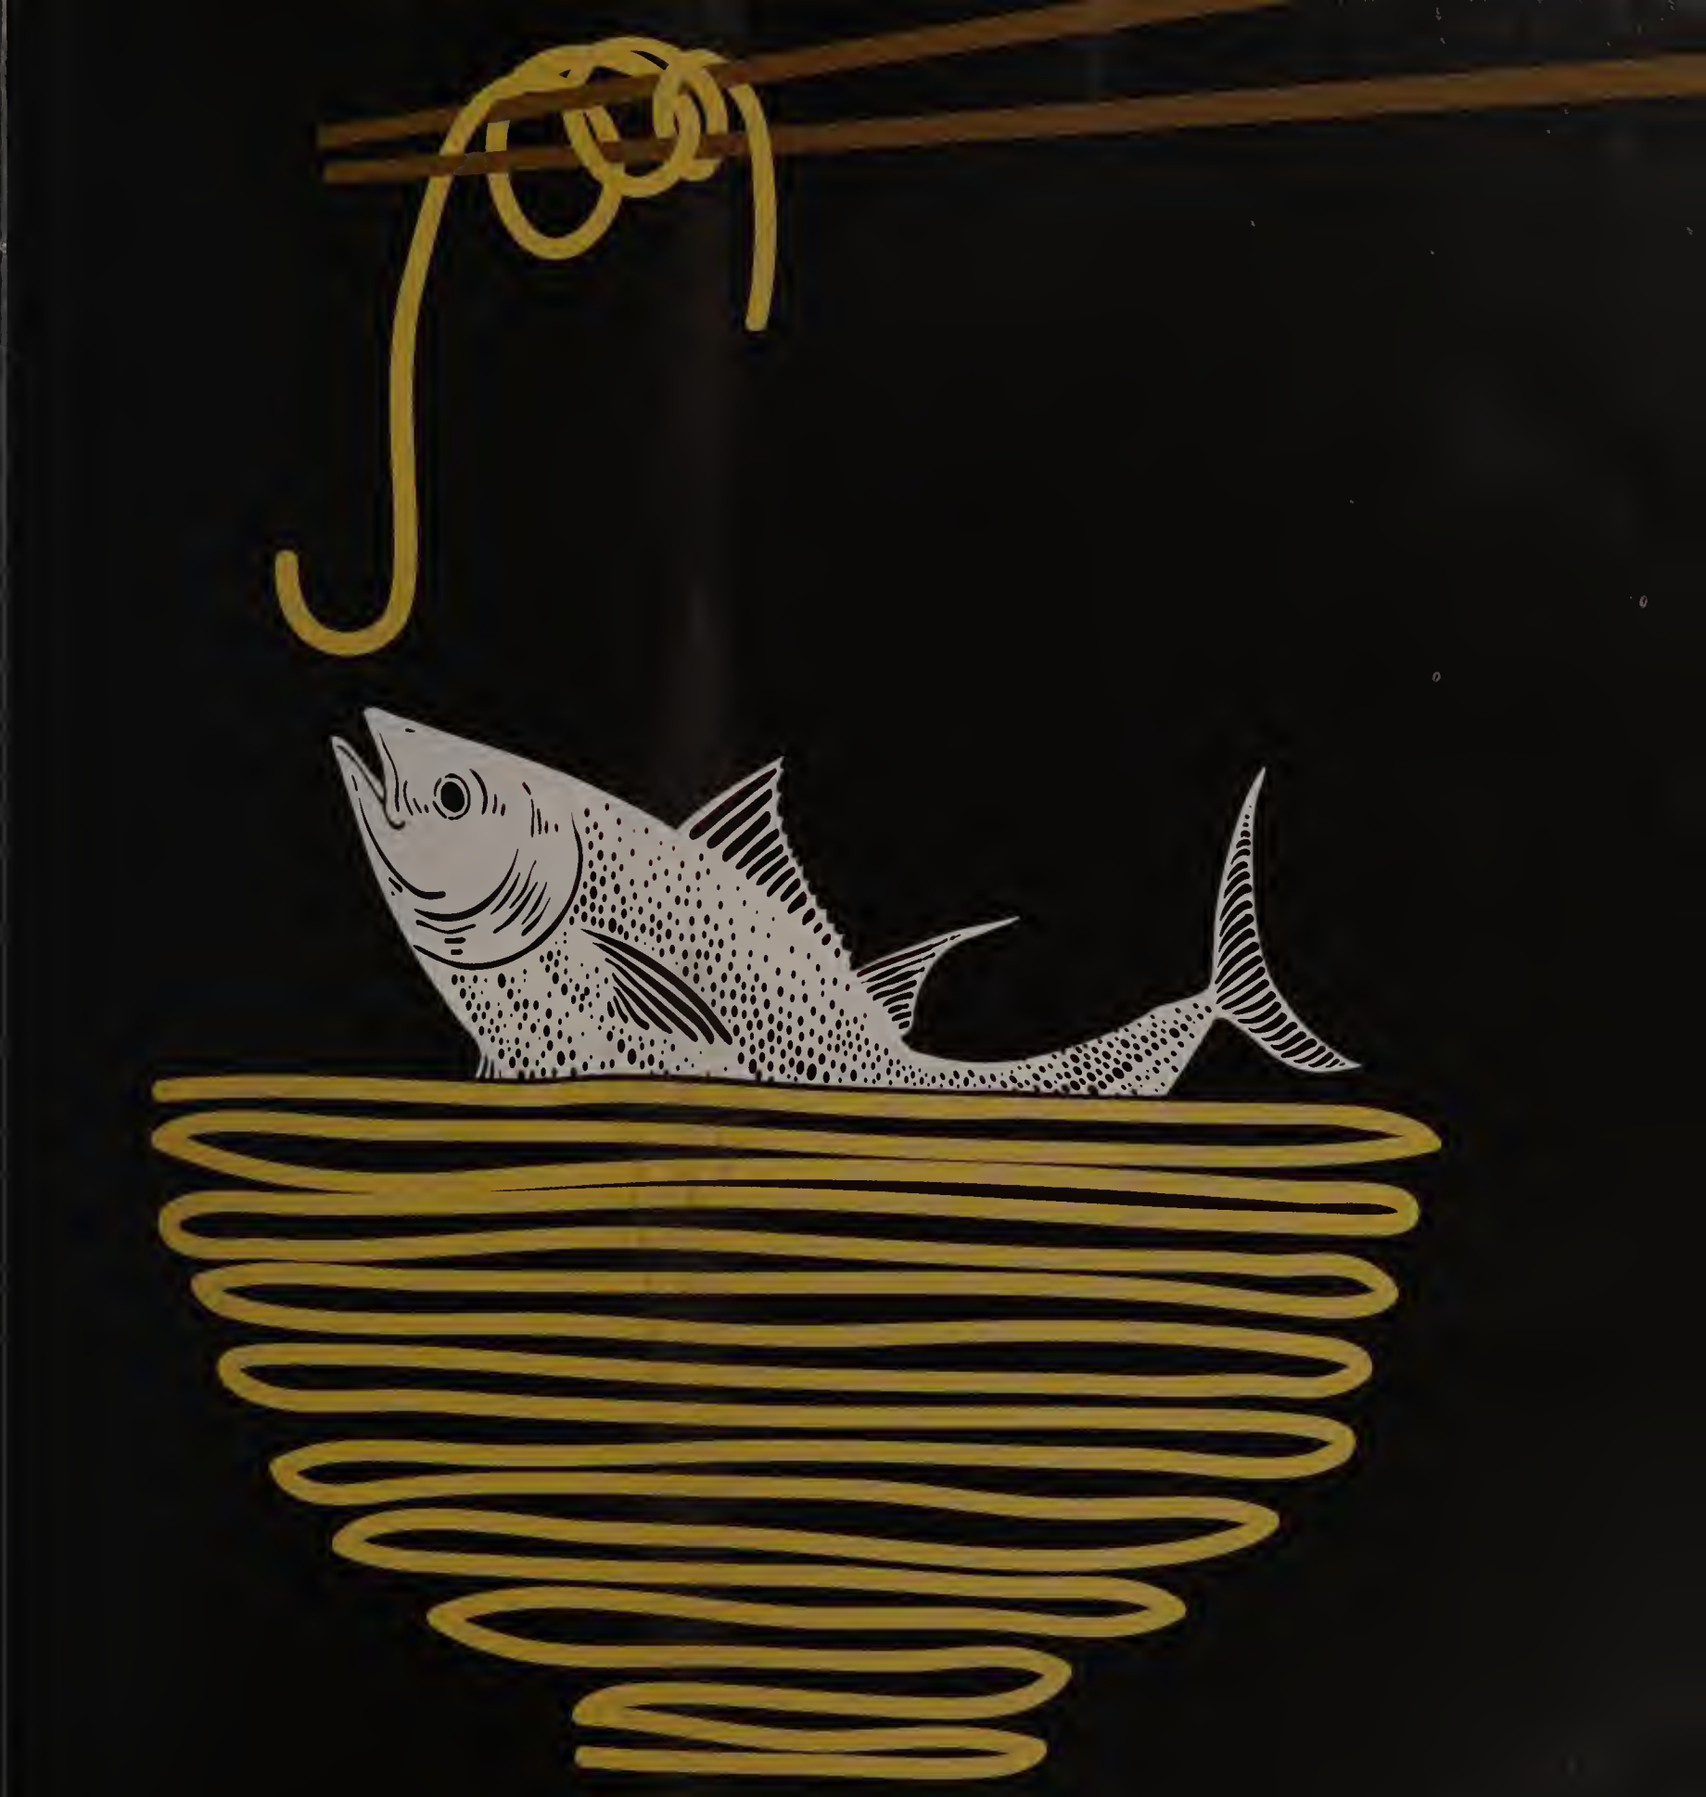
Anything You Axe For

The custom instruments made by Somerville's Equilibrium Guitars sound great—and they look out-of-this-world. "One of the guitars we're going to be finishing up soon involves an inlay of a UFO abducting the pyramids of Giza," says Dave Cohen, who co-founded the business with his wife, Mariann. Entirely self-taught makers, they've managed to amass more than 10,000 followers on Instagram, one of their main sources of both customers and inspiration. "There's an entire culture of people that are constantly sharing and reposting—not just guitars—but building ideas and processes," Cohen says.

But they also attract new customers out in the field. Both Cohen—who plays in local metal band Chuggernaut—and his wife are Berklee alums and musicians. "It's a pretty wonderful thing to be in the position that we're technically endorsing ourselves," he says. "It also adds validity to the company when we're out there road testing and playing our own instruments live, and people hear what we're doing and really like the sound and the look of everything, and they ask us, 'What are these guitars?' Well, actually, this is us!"

Each year, the pair make between 12 and 25 guitars, commissioned by musicians across the country and crafted in their space at Joy Street Studios. A just-launched repair division (and partnership with Mr. Music in Allston) has allowed the couple to expand their staff—and to focus on their custom creations, each of which Cohen sees as a passion project. "I've always been interested in how the guitar works. Even as far back as when I was 13, I was interested in how I could potentially make my guitars sound better and play better," he says. "My uncle was a huge influence for me because he had all of these old repair books and was a lifelong tinkerer. He showed me early on that you can do things yourself, and if you have an idea, you can go through all of those steps to see it completed."

Cohen is open to any idea his customers bring to him (the aforementioned UFO guitar will also feature a montage of different career representations of Shaquille O'Neal). "My goal is to understand the source of inspiration and why they're looking to get something from us, something custom, something different that they can't just buy off the rack," he explains.



"We're trying to make the best use of the materials... and also just trying to minimize our impact on the environment."

"So I'll ask questions. If there's a specific color they're interested in, what is it about that they really love and how would they want to incorporate that? And if there's a musician that they really love, what aspects of that would they want to blend into this?"

The custom guitars start at a base price of around $3,000 but can run more than twice that and often have Cohen hunting far and wide for special materials. Personally, he gravitates toward North American woods like buckeye burl—"It has this blond-and-gray mottled appearance that almost looks like smoke and bone mixed together"—and eco-friendly finishes, which they use in an in-house spray booth they built by hand.

"We're trying to make the best use of the materials," he says, "and also just trying to minimize our impact on the environment." Equilibrium's conservation efforts extend to a string-recycling program with guitar string company Adario, and they donate extra wood and decorative materials to the jewelers and artists who also work out of Joy Street Studios.

For Cohen, it all comes down to taking care and pride in one's environment and one's work. "I think these days there's such a culture of immediacy and a kind of disposable mentality," he says. "You buy something, and then you rebuy it, and it's cheap and fast and easy. Fortunately, there are still people who are willing to invest time and money and resources in something that's really cared after." / Alexandro Covollo

The first Legal Sea Foods restaurant opened in 1968. It was a small no-frills place where you paid before you ate, and the food was served on paper plates. It was a simple formula – offer only the highest quality, freshest seafood with fast and friendly service. Legal Fish Bowl is a modern interpretation of this heritage. Because five decades later, it's still all about the fish.

MAN, BUNS! The gelato sandwich at Italian Cafe Gelato is made with a brioche bun.

Good Eats: Get the Scoop

Forget the cup-versus-cone debate. This summer, the best way to enjoy creamy gelato is between two brioche buns. Quincy's Italian Cafe Gelato, a gelateria and sandwich shop opened last month by Denise Santini and Giancarlo Baldini (co-owners of Casa Razdora) and Daniele Buzza, serves a gelato sandwich that features two scoops of flavors crafted in house. Try the rich hazelnut with a mascarpone and caramelized fig creation, or opt for a pairing of mango and strawberry made with fresh fruit. "In Italy, the sandwiches are a big deal," Santini says. "They eat them all the time—they eat them for lunch." Looks like dessert is covered, too. / Meghan Kavanaugh

WHAT'S IN A NAME? Mooncussers were land pirates said to plunder shipwrecks and curse the moon when it guided vessels to safety

LASSO THE MOON

A MULTILEVEL BACK BAY SEAFOOD SPOT WILL SPAN FINE AND CASUAL DINING.

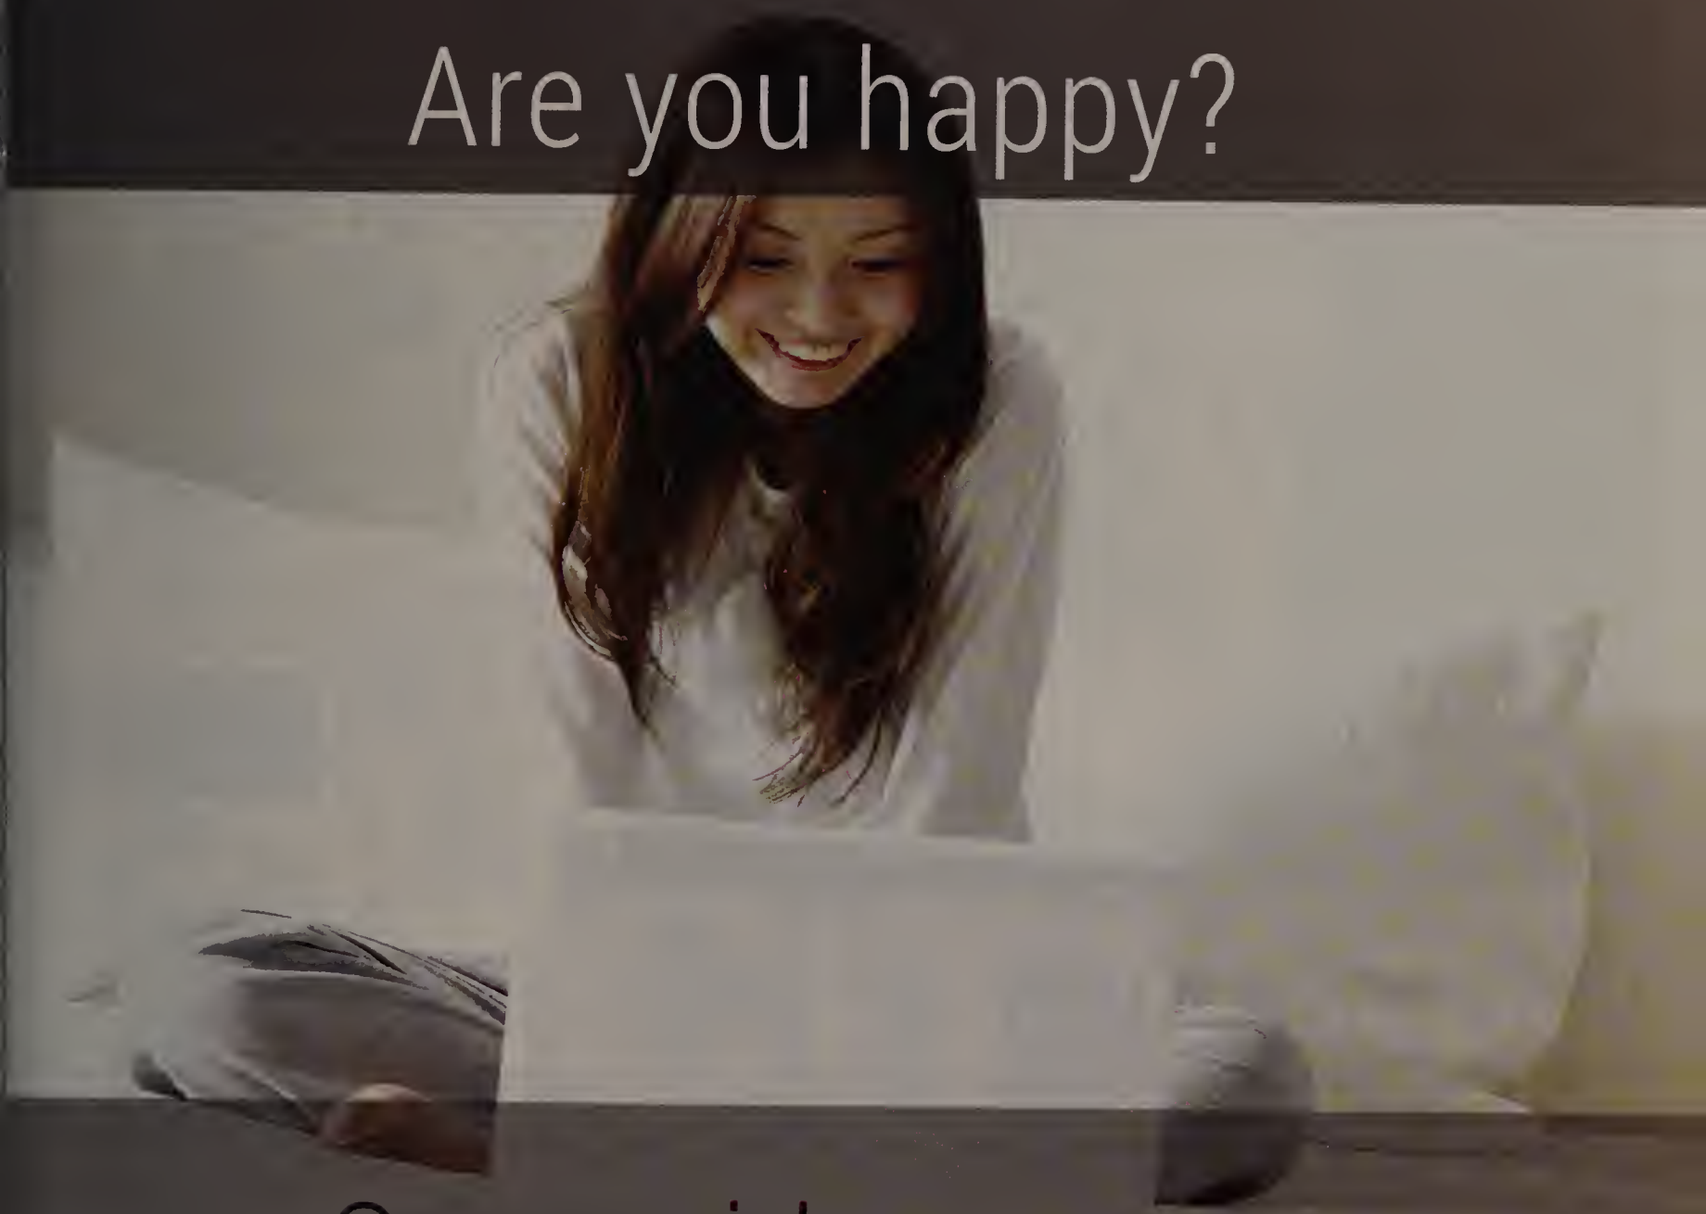
Long before he opened 80 Thoreau in Concord, Ian Calhoun had his eyes on starting a restaurant in Boston. Now, more than six years after opening that beloved suburban spot, Calhoun is set to fulfill his earlier ambitions with Mooncusser Fish House, slated to open in late July across from the Castle at Park Plaza.

"This fish restaurant idea existed in my mind at the time. I think now is the time to take this kind of opportunity," says Calhoun, who's having Concord staff reprise their roles at Mooncusser. "Doing it with Carolyn [Johnson, chef] and Vincent [Vela, maître d'] gives us a lot of experience."

The three-story, 4,800-square-foot triangular space provided a design challenge for Calhoun, but he settled on splitting it into a casual bar serving lunch and dinner on the first floor and a formal dining room on the third floor, with the kitchen occupying the second floor.

"It's still a small space, but when you see it without any partitions, it's pretty cool," Calhoun says. "We have the same template on both floors, and we designed a fine-dining restaurant within it, and we designed a fun bar within it."

Dubbed Moon Bar and set to open a few weeks after the dining room, the first floor has a 30-seat triangular bar in the middle of the space and an open kitchen area behind it. Additional seats scattered along the window and in the back of the space bring Moon Bar to 48 seats. The downstairs menu will include simpler fare that's quicker to prepare such as lobster rolls and fish tacos as well as a beer-and-wine list with an extensive by-the-glass menu of white wines that will tap into Mooncusser's 400-bottle selection.



The third-floor fine dining area will feature white tablecloths, pine floors, recessed lighting and seating for 60 that includes a series of two-top tables in the middle of the space and four-top tables at a long banquette along the windows. The upstairs menu will include entrees such as a pan-roasted striped bass with beans, cabbage and truffles as well as a stuffed skate with lobster, potatoes and baby carrots. Among the starters will be fluke crudo and smoked bluefish pate, and a five-course tasting menu of local fish will be available every night.

"It's more elegant and refined upstairs," Calhoun says. "That's reflected in all the things that go into the dish. It doesn't mean there won't be the same kind of thoughtfulness and prep downstairs, but when it comes to putting dishes together, it'll be at a different pace up here."

And Calhoun hopes that Mooncusser can offer something different from the oyster bars that have popped up in spots across the city. "While we've all enjoyed the amazing success of the oyster bar family, for us we're putting fish at the top of the stack," he says. "It's not that we won't serve shellfish, but we're focusing on fish."

CHARACTER STUDY: For more from Tammy Lang, visit improper.com

VELVET TOUCH

Performer and impersonator Tammy Lang is best known as Tammy Faye Starlite, the long-running character she describes as a "photonegative of a country singer." She'll be embodying a very different kind of musician at Oberon's inaugural GLOW Festival for her one-woman show Nico: Evening of Light, for which she'll portray the late Velvet Underground singer and Warhol muse. We got Lang on the line to talk about taking on such an iconic personality ahead of the July 29 performance. / Alexondro Covollo

WHAT DOES PERFORMING AS NICO ENTAIL? Essentially it will be me improvising as Nico using her, for lack of a better term, more famous songs. There's her Velvet Underground era, her first solo record, Chelsea Girl—she was the first person to record Jackson Browne songs—a Dylan song and then some of her own compositions, which are fairly, I guess you'd say, macabre. I think [Velvet Underground's] John Cale described it as "music to commit suicide by." Then there are also her covers of the Doors' "The End" and David Bowie's "Heroes," which she mistakenly thought he'd written about her. I mean, who knows really if he did, but she thought he did, so it's her perspective that I'll be coming from. So essentially I'll be talking in a deep, pseudo-Germanic accent and being, hopefully, as offensive as possible. She had a subversive way of expressing herself—maybe consciously, maybe unconsciously and maybe both.

DO YOU SEE HER AS A TRAGIC FIGURE? I don't know, because she accomplished a lot in her almost 50 years on this planet. ... Then she got into heroin, which is unfortunate. ... But I don't know if I like to see her as tragic as much as just human. She had artistic triumphs, which were unfortunately recognized mostly after she died. She went kind of from muse to chanteuse, in her way. She had songs written about her, and then she started writing songs that were like nobody else. I mean, she wasn't like Joni Mitchell; she didn't write confessional songs. She wasn't like any other singer/songwriter of the '70s. ... And the lyrics may seem kind of abstract or random, but I think she picked them for the sound rather than the meaning. And I think the sound really gave them the meaning. There are some beautiful, existential, nihilistic songs—she said she was a fatalist. But tragic? I don't know. To me, she was kind of a heroine. It was certainly a young age to die, and maybe there was more she could have given, but maybe she just knew when to exit.

WHAT DO YOU LIKE ABOUT PERFORMING IN CHARACTER? You can say anything with impunity and then just say, "Well, it's a character! It's not me." I'm not a confrontational person on the outside, but if I feel like saying something a little off or off-color, or that could be perceived as nasty, just because I feel like saying it, then I can just say, "Well, they said it. I didn't." But being a Jewish woman who went to yeshiva my whole life, I feel like, well, I like Holocaust jokes. [Laughs.] I'm all for the idea that anything can be funny as long as it's funny.

Drink of the Moment
PERFECT STORM

PRICE: $11

INGREDIENTS: Spiced rum, muddled blueberries, ginger and lemon simple syrup, ginger beer

TASTE: "It's got a little kick and a little bite to it," says the Social Register's beverage director, Dan Bacigalupo, who wanted to add a punch to his take on a Dark 'n' Stormy by throwing in extra ginger.

PAIR IT WITH: One of Bacigalupo's favorite shareable plates, like edamame dumplings ($9) or crabcake sliders ($14), whipped up by chef Sean McCabe.

NAMESAKE: Brought to you by the team behind the Brahmin, the month-old Social Register sits on the ground floor of the Aloft Boston Seaport hotel and is named after the directory of "the one percent of the one percent" that's been in circulation since 1890. Says Bacigalupo, "[We want to] give that feeling to everybody from all walks of life." That spirit carries onto the cocktail menu with tipples titled after prominent American families. See: a take on a raspberry lime rickey given the Thorndike name and a watermelon martini dubbed after the Whipple family.

THE SOCIAL REGISTER
401 D St., Boston
(857-496-4104)
socialregisterboston.com

ATMOSPHERE: Guests are greeted by a giant black-and-white mural flecked with a gaggle of '20s gals to evoke the moment "when you walked into a gin joint and all the celebrities were there," Bacigalupo says. Tufted couches, high-tops and two bars—one copper-topped, the other covered in pennies—fill the 7,000-square-foot industrial space that leads to another 50 seats on the patio. The speakeasy vibe even extends to the delivery of the bill, presented in a hollowed book that one may have used to stash cash or a pistol. / Soroh Hogmon

DYNAMIC DUO: Producer Simone Scazzocchio and singer Shea Rose are set for their third season curating music at the Gardner Museum.

MASTER CLASS

Berklee alums Simone Scazzocchio and Shea Rose, curators of the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum's RISE music series, are tapping talent from their alma mater for the upcoming season, which will have students and fellow grads rocking Calderwood Hall as opening acts for major names. The season kicks off on Sept. 7, when current student Domi Degalle opens for British headliner Jacob Collier, but in the meantime, we had the duo reflect on their own college days. / Meghon Kovonaugh

WHAT WAS YOUR FAVORITE CLASS?

Scazzocchio: Contemporary Techniques in Film Scoring with Sheldon Mirowitz. It was a humbling class, challenging and motivating. It made me realize how much I didn't know, and it made me question what I knew. The class is designed for both personal and professional growth, challenging your sensibility and your musicianship. Rose: Harmony 1 with Eric Byers and Writing Skills with Jeff Perry are what I would call the "building block" courses at Berklee. When I started, I had very little music theory education, so getting a ton of information about how to write and see music on paper was paralyzing at times. I'm grateful to Eric and Jeff for teaching these concepts in a very simple, practical and real-life way.

WHO WAS YOUR FAVORITE PROFESSOR?

Scazzocchio: Each one gave me something different and equally significant. Vuk Kulenovic and Tibor Pusztai both became close mentors and friends, challenging the hell out of my writing with a lot of love and passion. They both passed during the past year or two, but I carry their teaching with me every time I write. Rose: The late Armsted Christian was just beyond. You can't teach soul, but you can be a person of light who helps others access it in themselves, and that's who Armsted was in his life.

WHAT PERFORMANCE WERE YOU MOST PROUD OF AS A STUDENT?

Scazzocchio: I had the honor of conducting a 100-piece choir in the beautiful Futura Production studios for a project called Rhythm of the Universe. Each person in the choir was from a different country. Rose: I was proud to graduate. There was a moment when I didn't care to finish. While in school, I had several real-world experiences, and those revealed a different kind of music industry out there. ... I'm grateful that I stuck with it though. Once the glitter and gold settles, the practical skills, friends, professors and Berklee network is a strong fabric that's not as flaky, I think, as the industry

Shore Support

The standard mesh-lined men's bathing suit simply wasn't cutting it for Zachary Baiany. As a teenager, he'd use compression shorts under his suit for extra comfort, and soon he realized some of his friends were wearing spandex under their suits—or opting to wear gym shorts layered over compression underwear.

"I did research on how suits came to be their current form and found out mesh had just been used since the 1950s because it was a cheap and easy material to add in to provide some support," Baiany says. "That was when I realized how many people would love a short with a built-in compression liner."

After making seven prototypes over several years of development, he launched Freewear, a line of men's bathing suits, just in time for this year's beach season. The online shop currently offers board shorts with a compression liner, and Baiany, now 22 and a recent BC grad, hopes to eventually expand to other bathing suit styles. For now, he is happy to have solved a comfort problem—and he's surprised Freewear is earning kudos for more than comfort: "People have liked the look just as much as the feel." / Matt Martinelli

REALITY CHECK

A CAMBRIDGE AUTHOR'S LATEST NOVEL EXPLORES VIDEO GAMES AND REAL-WORLD RELATIONSHIPS.

The Chalk Artist* by Allegra Goodman
Published by The Dial Press, 352 pages, $27

IN HER EIGHTH NOVEL, CAMBRIDGE AUTHOR Allegra Goodman describes the virtual wonderland of gaming in such a fantastic style that we become nearly as entranced as her teenage character Aidan. Knights, elves, dragon's blood, diamonds, arms turning silver, heads decapitated and recapitated—the keyboard magic clicks the wild world of EverWhen into being.

Aidan is the student of idealistic English teacher Nina, daughter of Viktor, a video-game mogul whose company, Arkadia, produces EverWhen. A believer in the magic of poetry, Nina falls in love with Collin, a college dropout who draws beautifully fluid artwork in chalk, graffiti style, and waits tables at Grendel's in Harvard Square. She eventually introduces Collin to her father, who hires him as an artist at Arkadia, where his talent is both appreciated and constrained.

Meanwhile, Nina slowly lures her reluctant student Aidan away from the screen and into the realms of Emily Dickinson and Shakespeare. They develop a bond that's quite different from the impersonal connections Aidan makes with role-playing strangers. But Nina, Collin and Aidan all become entwined with one gamer, the dangerous Daphne, whose witchy manipulations span fantasy and reality. Goodman brings sweetness and complexity to Nina and Collin's romance, and she lends plenty of poetry to Aidan's travels in and out of the enticing yet disturbing virtual world.

FROM PAGE 25: Thorny branches overhead turned into talons, flaming twigs to ashen feathers. The forest phoenix woke, and Riyah and Tildor threw themselves onto the bird's back. The landscape shifted under them as they soared into the air. With each wingbeat, the phoenix carried them over smoldering trees and moonlit fields, twisted sunflowers, stubble glowing with white frost. ◆

ON THE RAILS

FOLLOW THE INSIDE TRACK ON YOUR NEXT TRIP TO EUROPE.

EUROPEANS HAVE A WAY OF APPRECIATING things that Americans take for granted. They revere the Adonis-like athletes of soccer; we measure masculinity in concussions sustained on the football field. Their most popular Kylie is Minogue; ours is Jenner. Their train travel is clean, reliable and convenient; we tap dance around discarded chicken wings during daily subway commutes that can take 10 minutes or 10 hours, depending on the weather.

Pats and Kardashian fans may quibble over the first two points—but on the last, surely all can agree that the EU trumps the U.S.

Exhibit A: Eurail, a travel system that lets visitors use a single pass to hop between nearly all major trains (and frequently, ferries and city subways) in 28 different countries. Americans, used to an interstate rail infrastructure that can seem hopelessly dated and perpetually delayed, might balk at the idea. They shouldn't.

When you're traveling between certain European cities or contiguous countries, trains are frequently faster than planes. There are no check-in times or security lines to clear and fewer of the delays and cancellations common to air travel; just be on the platform when the train pulls up, hop on board and show your Eurail pass if asked. Trains are likely cheaper for multicountry jaunts; Eurail pass prices vary based on the duration of travel and number of countries included. Trains are more comfortable (two words: leg room), don't get overbooked and—this is no small detail—put the journey on par with the destination.

Yeah, that sounds trite. But in an age when selfie stick-toting tourists rush, face in a phone, from one Instagram-worthy landmark to another, there's something to be said for luxuriating in the process, for traversing landscapes that are even more stunning sans filters, gradually absorbing new cultural contexts as country borders are crossed and topographies transition, and glimpsing the scenic small towns and villages that aren't reached by plane.

Train travel is, in a word, romantic—whether you're crisscrossing Europe with fellow nomadic friends or eat-pray-loving across the continent all on your own. As a case study, consider Eurail's new Italy-Switzerland pass, a handy two-country ticket that starts at $248. The specific itinerary is your own, but here's a helpful cheat sheet.

Fly into Zurich and then hop the hourlong train to Lucerne, a small but stately city set on the banks of a large eponymous lake and home to the 1333-built Chapel Bridge, the oldest covered wooden bridge in Europe. Lucerne looks stunning, whether you're strolling among high-end shops, soaking up mountain views from the balconies at Hotel Schweizerhof (where every room is dedicated to the story of a different celebrity guest, from Mark Twain to Elizabeth Taylor) or sailing on placid waters aboard a steamboat operated by Switzerland's Gotthard Panorama Express, a boat-train system that, like a few other premier lines requiring advance seat reservations, can be used by Eurail pass holders for a relatively nominal surcharge.

The Gotthard Panorama offers daily connections to Lugano, Switzerland, darting through rolling hills and valleys that look like backdrops from a box of Swiss Miss. In contrast to Lucerne's lush greenery and the crisp air on the northern side of the Alps, Lugano, on the range's southern side, suddenly looks, feels (given the more humid Mediterranean climate) and sounds (note the sudden uptick in vowels) much more like Italy. It's right on the border of the Boot, after all. Lugano's meandering streets are filled with salumerie and gelaterie, and the Olive Tree Trail, a picturesque 3.5-kilometer trek across the remains of ancient groves, is a popular hike for those who want to visit Gandria, a well-preserved old quarter of stucco buildings and cobblestone streets hiding quaint restaurants like Locanda Gandriese, a spiffy little spot where bottles are uncorked on a gorgeous lakefront terrace.

From Lugano, it's nearly a three-hour rail ride to Genoa, Italy, an underrated city known as one of the Mediterranean's most historic and busiest seaports—but perhaps best utilized as a home base from which to explore the enchanting tiny towns that speckle the crescent-shaped coast of the country's northwest Liguria region (where insider tours organized by Beautiful Liguria are worth the extra Euros). Eurail-affiliated trains can deliver you to Sestri Levante, a sleepy, still-largely unexplored seaside town where the beautiful beaches seem to attract more Italian visitors than foreigners. When you're done baking in the sun, take a cooking class at Accademia dei Sapori, a culinary school operating out of a historic Italian convent, or let pros do the work at the restaurant inside Hotel Miramare, where white tablecloths topped with whole-roasted fish overlook the super-serene—and aptly named—Bay of Silence.

For a different daytrip, avoid the trend-seeking tourist hordes that increasingly overrun Liguria's five-village hot spot, Cinque Terre. Instead, opt for the equally charming but less-trod honorary sixth sibling: Porto Venere, a medieval fishing village best accessed by a train-to-boat transfer. Here you'll ascend rocky steps to the 1198-consecrated Church of St. Peter, perched on a jagged ocean cliff that offers breathtaking views of Byron's Grotto (named for poet Lord Byron, who drew inspiration here). You can also hike up to Doria Castle, a rambling 12th-century fortification with panoramic vistas, or wander tightly winding stone streets lined with tiny shops hawking homemade jars of pesto—which originated in Liguria—and related foodstuffs, from basil popsicles to bottles of basil liqueur.

These are the nooks and crannies that 747s simply don't service. In Europe, it's the deep network of trains that can best take you far off the beaten path. ◆

PETITE ELITE EATS

LES SABLONS TREADS A PATH BETWEEN COSTLY LUXURY AND INEFFABLE COOL.

At their wildly popular Island Creek Oyster Bar and Row 34 restaurants, hospitality grandee Garrett Harker, veteran chef Jeremy Sewall and entrepreneurial oystermen Skip Bennett and Shore Gregory serve New England seafood in a wrapper of hip-looking urban dining rooms, polished service and top-flight beverage programs. At their new Harvard Square restaurant Les Sablons, the team is aiming for a much tonier fine-dining experience that is haute French in inspiration and served with photogenically tweezered precision—all at luxury prices that ICOB and Row fans may find shocking.

Service here starts with great epi de blé baguette and superb goat butter; the latter especially makes it hard to heed Mom's admonition not to fill up on bread. Hmm: Given the price/portion ratio of some dishes here, maybe have some after all. For instance, seafood cocktail (Alaskan king crab on one visit, Maine lobster on another) is a model of pristine claw meat served with perfect restraint, barely kissed with horseradish and crème fraîche, paired with picturesque slices of fried lotus root, but it's a bare few bites for, gulp, $24. Beef tartare ($19) earns its keep better with a superb hand-cut texture, the umami uplift of oyster aïoli and gaufrette potato (wicked fancy potato chips).

The indeed-smallish small plates generally dress up one perfect ingredient with subtle, highly Instagrammable adornments, like corn vichyssoise ($14), a velvety cold puree of sweet summer corn with a bare squiggle of tarragon cream, or bluefin tuna crudo ($16), big chunks of ruby fish in a bath of cucumber water and a sprinkle of corn kernels and snap peas. Rye spaghetti ($15) lavishly crowns coils of chewy, nutty pasta with shavings of chanterelle and Parmesan atop a vivid smear of pesto. Crispy potato is like God's tater tots, the kind you don't mind topping with caviar and crème fraîche, but again: Three for $19 raises eyebrows. English pea soup ($14) is a shallow bowl of pure, verdant late-springtime flavor, while foie gras ($21) with roasted onion and pretty rhubarb Dijon delivers the creamy, lordly goods.

Entrees may inspire ancient jokes about post-prandial pizza. They're not tiny, but your dad who deemed steak a safe bet here will still be nonplussed by the size of fork-tender filet mignon ($46), prettily plated with pommes purée in an artful puddle of bordelaise. Bulking it out with Parisian gnocchi, a drab-looking side of chewy dumplings drenched in herbed goat butter, is a good idea, but, ahem, $17. To be fair, most entrees here would feel at home at L'Espalier or Menton. Sewall and his chef de cuisine Brian Rae have crushing skills with fish, as in the gorgeously crusty, skin-on striped bass ($37) done perfectly atop tomatoes, olives and saffron broth, or the dynamite Spanish turbot ($42) over a phenomenal coarse mash of English peas, plus chunks of blue crabmeat and beurre blanc. Rohan duck ($39) is a deftly rendered French classic, a fan of crisp duck-breast slices atop a roasted-cherry sauce with a mild, finely turned panisse alongside. And some sides are transporting, like a tomato gratin ($13) surrounding a mound of clotted cream, a balletic counterpoint of juicy sweetness and creamy tang.

Desserts range from very good to good-lawd-that's-heavenly. To focus on the latter, get lemon posset ($10), an ancient, pudding-like English dessert that wrangles an astonishing, ineffably creamy texture from only milk, sugar and lemon juice, and Paris-Brest ($10), a head-turning, dreamy confection of choux pastry filled with roasted white-chocolate crème.

By now, you understand this kitchen's sensibilities: French in spirit, refined, luxury-leaning, painterly. It's not the way most of us eat anymore, and when we do at these breathtaking prices, it's likely a special occasion. But Harker, Sewall and Co. make a strong case for justifying their dizzying tabs on a few counts. One, the two up-and-down rooms here are uncommonly cool, shoehorned as they are into the lovely, impossibly narrow old Conductor's Building. It's an impressive combination of old-world accoutrements (luxe upholstery, linens, stemware), 19th-century industrial feel (ancient exposed brick, steampunky ironwork) and cheeky modern art (e.g., a Bowie portrait against a field of Play-Doh containers). These rooms also give their patrons uncommonly generous space to breathe (especially in the semicircular booths upstairs) and conversation-friendly ambient-noise levels found only in our swankest culinary palaces. Two, the service is superb even by Harker's famously hospitality-centric standards: attentive, deep on the menu and wine list, discreetly formal without seeming stuffy or pretentious, invisible when not needed. Three, the cocktail and beer list is by Jackson Cannon, Harker's superstar beverage program manager, with a bar staff trained to his exacting standards. Four, sommelier Lauren Daddona has assembled a wine list that is broader than it needs to be. We followed her recommendations to spectacular bottles in the $80-$100 range (it's easy to go way higher), but also found plenty of joy in the $50s and $60s. The result is an ambitious high-wire act that succeeds in delivering top-flight sophistication in food and service without the pomp and starch of the one-percenter joints across the Charles. When it's time to celebrate a promotion, engagement, round-number birthday or anniversary, Les Sablons is where the cool kids will want to be. ◆

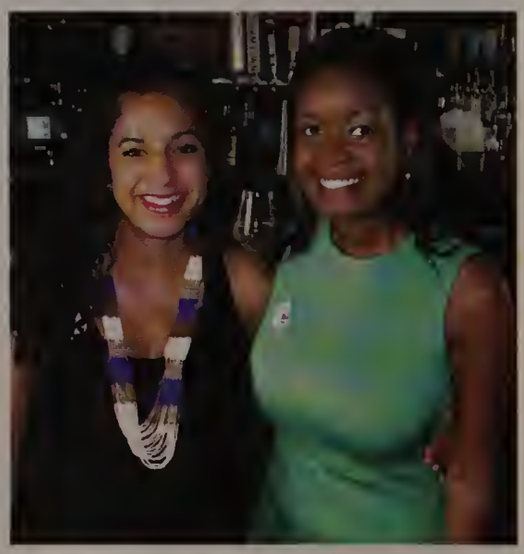
GOOD COMPANY



HIGHLIGHTS FROM HIGH SOCIETY

→ Morgan Memorial Goodwill Industries staged its annual gala, The Good Party, under a tent at its Roxbury headquarters on June 15. This year, Goodwill expects to serve 7,800 people in its job training and career services programs, and one participant, Lorenne Sirena, was a guest speaker at the fundraiser, which was catered by seven local restaurants. Some 300 community, business and political leaders attended The Good Party, which raised more than $275,000.

→ The Big Sister Association of Greater Boston's Young Professional Board held its Summer Soiree at Tapestry on June 21. The cocktail party, a fund- and friend-raiser for the mentoring organization, included raffles and a silent auction. The 150 guests raised $26,000 to go toward Team Big Sister's overall fundraising goal for September's Rodman Ride for Kids, an annual cycling event through Massachusetts that supports youth-focused social service organizations.

ASK CHERYL

Q: MY SKIN IS ON THE OILY SIDE AND I AM PRONE TO PIMPLES AND BREAK-OUTS; USUALLY AT THE WORST POSSIBLE TIME. WHAT SHOULD I DO WHEN I HAVE A PIMPLE?

A: We have all experienced an embarrassing break out in a noticeable spot at an inopportune time. The best thing to do is to consult a skin care professional as soon as you can. The one thing NOT to do is to pick at it. Picking can lead to discoloration or scarring, which can be permanent.

Once the immediate crisis is under control it's important to establish a skin care routine of effective home care products combined with regular professional skin care services. Our staff of Master Aestheticians would be happy to meet with you for a free consultation. They can recommend the right products and treatments, which may consist of specialized facials, light chemical peels and /or microdermabrasion to help keep your skin blemish free!

TICK-TOCK

NOLAN COMPLICATES THE PASSAGE OF TIME IN HIS THRILLING 70 MM WAR PICTURE.

Pity poor Tom Hardy. After appearing as Bane in Christopher Nolan's The Dark Knight Rises, and now as an RAF fighter pilot in the writer/director's latest, a fictionalized re-creation of 1940's Dunkirk evacuation, it's easy to joke that the British-born actor is destined to have his mouth m[illegible]zzled nearly every time he appears in one of [illegible]n's large-scale epics.

And large-scale, Dunkirk most certainly is. While I was unable to view Nolan's chronology-shuffling war picture in an ideal setting the first time, I'll be seeing it again in at least one of the 125 cinemas nationwide that will be projecting it the old-fashioned way, on film and in the 70 mm format. They include three local venues: the AMC Loews Boston Common, the Coolidge Corner Theatre and the Somerville Theatre in Davis Square. Nolan and his extremely talented cinematographer, Hoyte Van Hoytema (who also lensed Nolan's last picture, 2014's Interstellar), actually shot this entire production with a combination of IMAX and 65 mm film, formats Nolan has employed on only certain sequences of four of his previous features. For those adventurous viewers willing to go the extra mile to experience the film in the best possible format—70 mm IMAX—the nearest venue is Providence Place in Rhode Island.

Sure, you could shell out an exorbitant amount to watch the picture on one of the digital IMAX screens that AMC has retrofitted into a number of their multiplexes, but it's not for nothing that a number of my critic colleagues and I refer to these screens as LieMAX. With the exception of the digital IMAX location at Jordan's Furniture in Reading, which utilizes a truly state-of-the-art 4K laser projector, they're a poor man's alternative to the real thing, pitched at a rich man's prices.

At this point, you may be asking yourself why I've been focusing so much on the visual presentation of the film. Simply put, it's this picture's raison d'être. If you're looking for a straightforward narrative about the events surrounding the military evacuation, you could do worse than watch Leslie Norman's 1958 melodrama, also called Dunkirk. Or better yet, you could seek out Lone Scherfig's Their Finest, this spring's much smaller-scaled romantic comedy-drama that focused on the very human cast and crew of a fictional film production designed to celebrate the civilian effort to aid in Dunkirk's evacuation. (Don't ever call it a "retreat"!)

You're unlikely to have a more cinematic experience in theaters this year.

Nolan, on the other hand, shows very little interest in developing backstories for his characters. In fact, you'll be hard-pressed to remember many of their names, save for a civilian teenager named George (Barry Keoghan). He hops aboard the Moonstone, a small pleasure yacht piloted by a Mr. Dawson (Mark Rylance) and his son Peter (Tom Glynn-Carney), who respond to a call to sail across the Channel to help get the shellshocked British soldiers off of the eastern mole on Dunkirk's beach, where they're sitting ducks for German attack, mainly by air. And yes, I did need to look up these last two characters' names.

The ostensible star of the film, though, is a foot soldier named Tommy played by debuting actor Fionn Whitehead. When first we see him, Tommy is outrunning German infantry fire in Dunkirk's streets as he makes a mad dash for the aforementioned beach, whereupon he stumbles upon his new mate for the next week, a silent soldier played by French actor Damien Bonnard.

But then, there's very little in the way of dialogue in Nolan's script, save for the chatter between a couple of Spitfire pilots played by Jack Lowden and Hardy—and you'll be hard-pressed to understand much of what they say. That's due to both the muffled sound of their voices as they speak through their oxygen masks and the insistent score by regular Nolan collaborator Hans Zimmer, who's seemingly built his music around the sound of a ticking clock (we get it), alternating his typically propulsive cues with the sound of gunfire, explosions and surf.

Presenting the historical events from three vantage points enables Nolan to indulge in a narrative device he's employed in various ways since 2000's Memento: nonlinear time passage. The events on the beach transpire over the course of a week; the civilians' approach in their small boats takes place over the course of a day, and the aerial dogfights lasted only a single hour. Rather than present these events in straightforward chronological order, Nolan has shuffled them, intercutting all of the action at once. The effect is disorienting once he begins presenting day and night scenes simultaneously, and although this does create some tension when you see the same events replayed at different times from varying perspectives, the mental gymnastics required is bound to put off more casual viewers who have little interest in seeing the film a second time, which is practically required to completely comprehend how all the pieces fit together.

Still, you're unlikely to have a more cinematic experience in theaters this year. Choose your cinema wisely. ◆

KEYS TO LIFE

A PIANO MASTER REFLECTS UPON HIS UNIQUE EXPERIENCES THROUGH MUSIC AND MEMOIR

FRED HERSCH'S LYRICAL PIANO MUSINGS place him among the top jazz musicians at his instrument in annual polls—and he's earned 10 Grammy nominations. He'll likely have a shot at another with his next solo album of originals and standards, Open Book, which won't be his only eagerly awaited release this September.

The pianist will open up in an actual book with the Sept. 12 publication of his memoir, Good Things Happen Slowly: A Life in and Out of Jazz. The idea grew out of an interview with the Bad Plus pianist Ethan Iverson, his former private student (Hersch also taught at his alma mater New England Conservatory from 1980 to 2015).

"Ethan was very interested in what it was like in the late '70s when I first came to New York," says Hersch, 61. "I wanted to write a book that even if you weren't a jazz head, there were other things you could get out of it. Of course, I've had a lot of drama with my personal life and my health, so that was part of it."

Hersch learned he was HIV-positive in the '80s. In 2008, he suffered AIDS-related dementia and grew gravely ill from pneumonia. Hersch was put into an induced coma for two months, and when he regained consciousness, he couldn't even hold a pencil.

"I realized my life as I knew it was gone," Hersch says, adding that he couldn't walk, stand, talk or even eat. "I weighed less than 100 pounds. I couldn't move my arms very well. I was just determined that I was going to get myself back together."

"When you go through something that's life-changing, obviously you come out the other side different."

He has—and then some. Hersch has received perhaps his greatest acclaim during the past several years. "I do feel like I'm playing better than ever," says the pianist, who'll bring his simpatico longtime trio with bassist John Hebert and drummer Eric McPherson to play the Rockport Jazz Festival at the Shalin Liu Performance Center on Aug. 10.

"When you go through something that's life-changing, obviously you come out the other side different," he says. "In my case, it was a motivator, and it was also the sense of 'Well, I've been through the worst of it, so if I play a chord that I don't like, it's not a tragedy.' You don't get bent around the small stuff as much."

Hersch was more easily flustered in his youth, navigating both his music and sexuality. "There weren't people who were out, who were in Hollywood or on TV," he says. "When you're young, you think you're the only person that way."

He kept his secret in the largely closeted jazz world as well—to a point. "I was the one who just said 'Screw it' and broke the mold and talked about not just being a gay jazz musician, but dealing with HIV," he says. "I thought maybe I could help some people along the line and make it easier for them. I didn't expect to be an activist, but I kind of ended up being one... I said, 'OK, I don't even know how much longer I'm going to be alive, so why hold back?' "

The same went for his playing. Hersch pioneered an impressionistic brand of jazz that drew from pop, classical and Brazilian influences, exploring the emotional layers of songs beyond mere technical facility. It paid off in the long run. He ties the title of his memoir (coined from a comment a doctor made during his coma) to his career as well.

"I was kind of a prodigy," says Hersch, who worked with jazz greats Art Farmer and Joe Henderson early on and played at New York musicians' haunt Bradley's, introducing himself to patrons Charles Mingus and Joni Mitchell. "But I was passed over by the whole young-lion movement, and I've always been a little different, not quite what [record companies] are looking for in terms of branding and packaging. Maybe it's a testament to sticking to what I do." ◆

MILLION-DOLLAR IDEAS

IT TAKES LONGER THAN YOU MIGHT EXPECT TO COME UP WITH A GOOD GET-RICH-QUICK SCHEME.

A COUPLE OF WEEKS AGO, I REVISITED MY former summer job as a house painter. All through college, I spent my summers scraping, staining and attempting not to fall off ladders, even when hornets suddenly flew out and into my mouth. It was hard work, but not as hard as my previous summer job, which was as a lobsterman. Once you've spent your days covered in kelp, attempting to keep your boat off the rocks while an ancient dinosaur insect plays got-your-nose with its primordial claws, huffing a pail of Nantucket Gray on dry land looks pretty good. House painters are very rarely lost at sea.

As I helped stain the trim on my sister-in-law's wraparound deck, I reflected that my work life continues to move in the right direction, which is to say, toward less of anything that really resembles work. Sure, I have deadlines and travel, but spending eight hours with my old friend Sherwin-Williams reminded me that I've got a pretty cush gig. To name just one advantage, writing is a fairly hornet-proof enterprise unless you're really doing it wrong.

But there's room for improvement, and my hours wielding the brush gave me plenty of time to contemplate get-rich-quick schemes. You see, my parents very selfishly decided not to become rich themselves, which rules out the easiest path to a life of leisure. I wasn't born with a silver spoon in my mouth. I was born in a bathtub, though. There's a house somewhere in Newburyport that's hopefully had a gut remodel sometime in the past few decades. You ever see a baby being born? Me neither, but I bet the aftermath is beyond the scrubbing bubbles.

So I need to create my own fortune, like Jessica Alba did. Perhaps you've seen her inspirational ad about how she overcame being rich and beautiful to become super-rich and beautiful, all because she believed in herself and her vision for kale kombucha sunscreen and organic farm-to-table diapers. I mean, I'm kicking myself for not thinking of that business plan, because I too surely would've raised $70 million in venture capital after getting outraged that some baby product almost gave my kid, Honor, a rash. It's just like how I could've founded Casamigos Tequila and sold it for a billion dollars, like George Clooney did. Why didn't I think of that? Of course people like tequila! George Clooney's just the only one who knew it.

For those of us who can't come up with products that nobody's ever thought of, like tequila or gluten-free toilet paper, the path to riches might have to involve some kind of new service. For instance, the sharing economy is big right now, so maybe you could make an app that allows northern landscapers to send their tractors to Florida for the winter. You just get big trucks and collect all the lawn mowers and stuff, then send them to the south and rent it all out. You'd have to have a Silicon Valley name, like 'ScapR. And this idea would also work for boats and anything else you don't use all winter. Is 'ScapR eventually going to ship your kids' beach toys to Fort Lauderdale for six months a year? We're not ruling it out, but that's probably at least Phase 3.

The important thing is just to start a company and keep it going no matter what. Remember how Amazon was an online bookstore before it became an all-knowing robot that sends you dog food before you even know you need it? 'ScapR might turn out to be the world leader in dromedary health care and supplies, but right now we're focused on disrupting regionality vis-à-vis capital expenditures in the horticulture segment. See, you learn to talk like that, and the next thing you know people are giving you money to start Juicero or the Fyre Festival. You don't even have to be friends with Ja Rule, who frankly seems like a liability.

I wasn't born with a silver spoon in my mouth. I was born in a bathtub, though.

Other than being born into it or selling your app, the other path to financial independence/total laziness is investing. This one is tricky, because whether you're playing the lottery or picking stocks, you're playing the lottery. Last year I was on a plane next to a guy who worked for Verizon and was telling me about this great 5G service they're rolling out that will stomp everyone else. "I should buy some Verizon stock!" I thought. Then I didn't, because I remembered that I'm an idiot and if I think something's a good idea then it's probably not. Lo and behold, I recently decided to see how Verizon is doing, and the top headline was "Verizon the worst stock of 2017." I mean, they bought Yahoo! And I include that exclamation point out of actual incredulity, not because it's part of your silly name, Yahoo!

Maybe that's my angle: a consulting company that gives advice you should ignore. I'll get Ben Affleck to be the face of it. Eventually it'll morph into a home-birth-assistance company called Bathtub Babies that we'll sell for millions. And then I'll retire—from helping relatives paint their houses. The fumes really do give you some crazy ideas. ◆

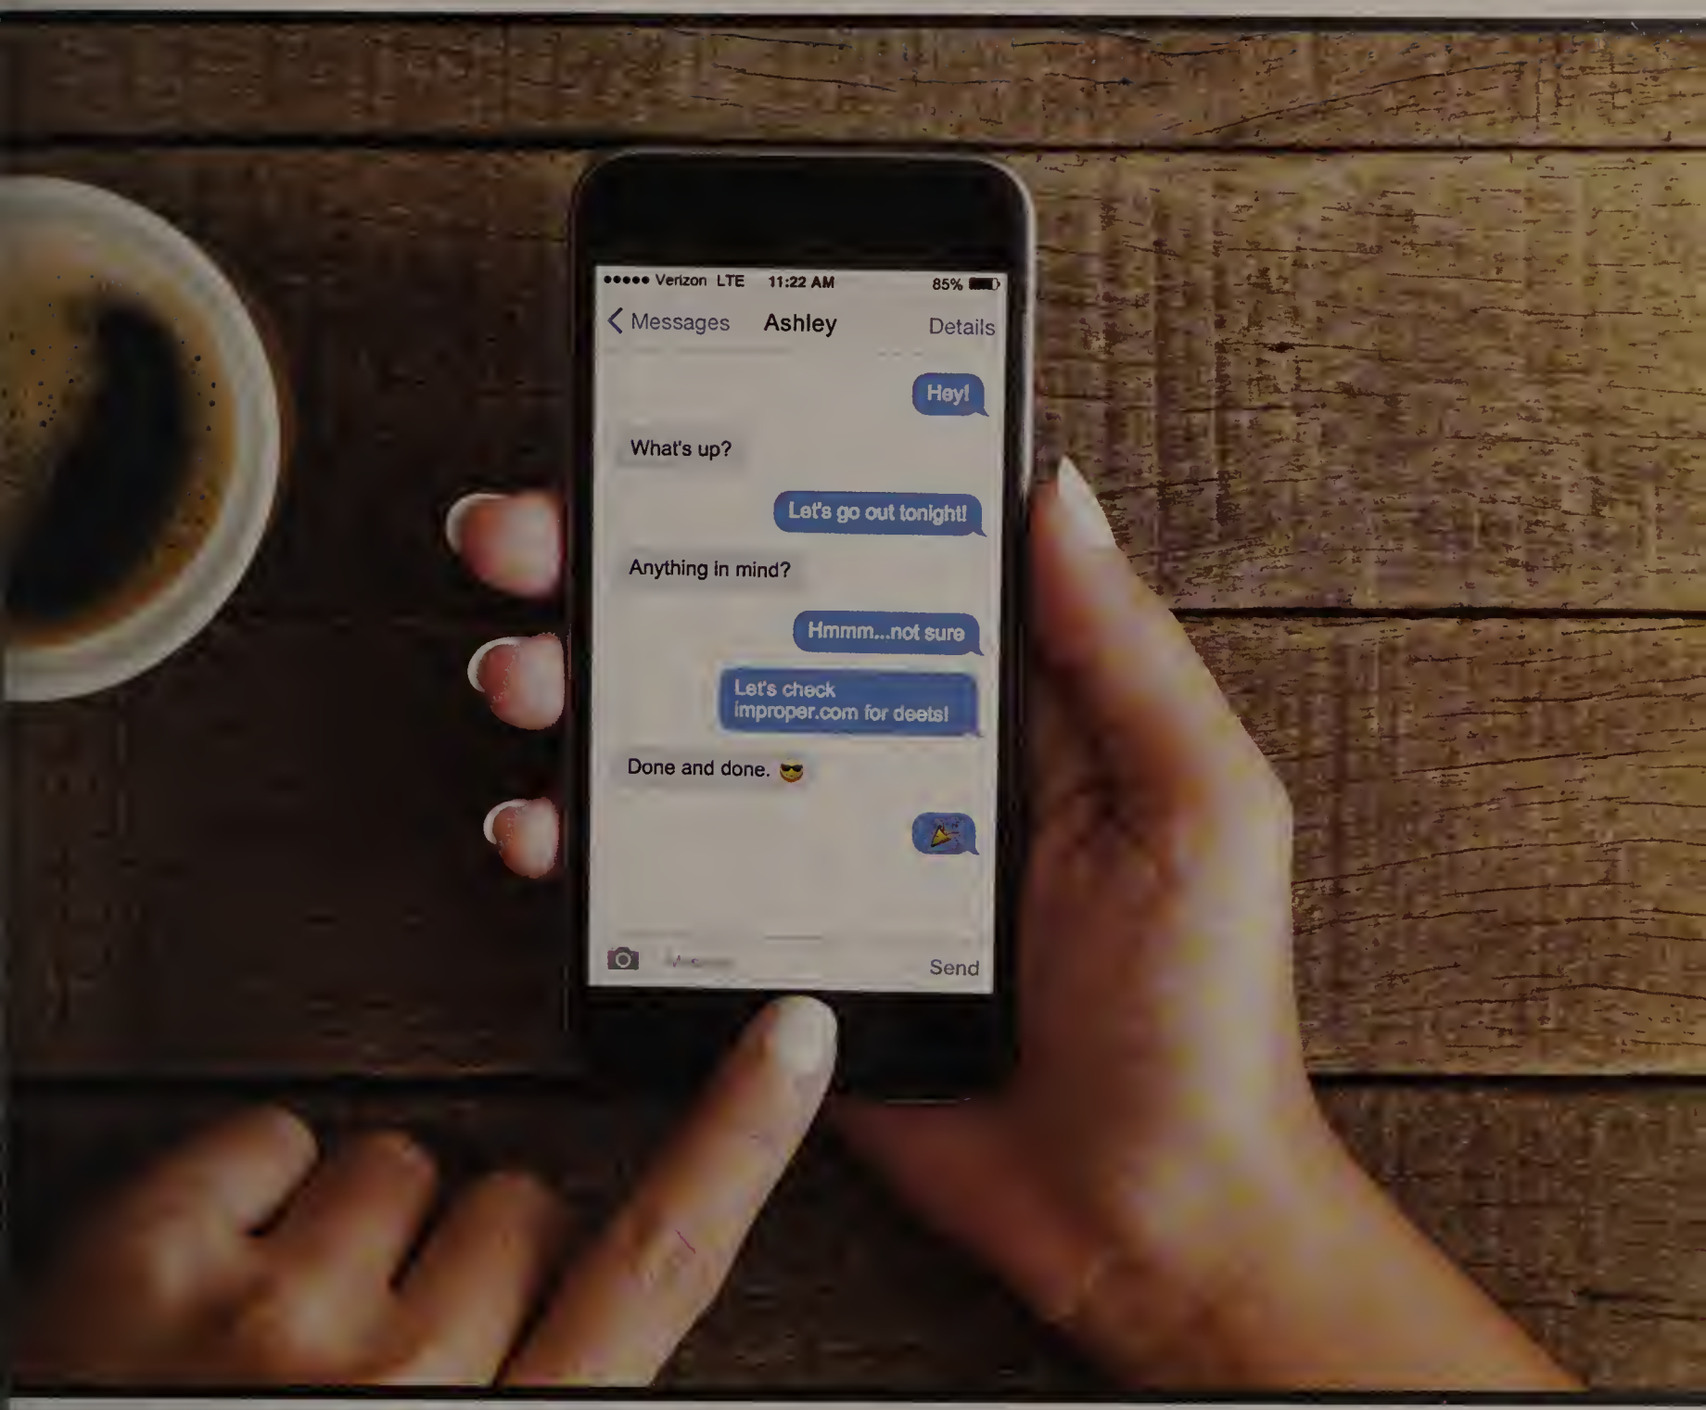
GROWING PAINS

SOUND ADVICE ON MANAGING LONG-TERM FRIENDSHIPS AND POST-GRAD BUDGETS

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

I'm in my late 20s and have lived in Boston for the past five years. But full-fledged adulthood is setting in and many of my close friends are getting married. As excited and happy as I genuinely am for them, I've noticed that their free time afterward wanes and now it's always me taking the initiative to stay in their lives. That said, each time we get together, either one-on-one or in a group, the chemistry is wonderful. But all the initiative work is starting to wear on me, and I don't want to let that turn into festering resentment toward the people I love best. My question then is two-fold: One, how realistic is it to keep married friends for years to come and at what point should I simply stop trying? And two, since my boyfriend and I are starting to talk about marriage ourselves, what carrot and/or stick options are there for us not to fall into the same world-omitting trap, particularly if we don't want children and will be reliant on our social group for years to come? Well, everything changes in life and not necessarily for the better. We have to change as well—sometimes, to survive. Maybe that sounds dramatic, but it's true. People also grow at different rates. Perhaps you've outgrown boyfriends in the past because they proved not as open as you are to certain things.

My answer to your first question: I would guarantee that as your friends increasingly marry, most of them will fall off your radar as time goes by. You'll change your job perhaps, live elsewhere, find that they didn't grow over the years and got boring. Or divorced. You'll look back and say, "Can't believe we were such good friends years ago." But you'll have to reach out to friends on a constant basis if you want to keep them. It is up to you. If you think that you are worthy and interesting and fun, you don't have a problem reaching out—because you know that you'll always be a treat for them. How do I know this? I'm a free-range chicken (or rooster) myself. I'm out with married couples constantly, and I most often make the call to keep the friendship rolling. Despite all the challenges of relationships, it is still a world of couples. If you're alone, you have to work at a social life. Most of it doesn't get delivered.



As for you and your boyfriend, couples in the best long-term relationships I know really only need each other, not necessarily children or friends. They're a unit—swans mating for life. This is rare but it can be done. Part of me thinks that if he becomes your husband and your best friend, a lot of things that worry you will be meaningless. Friends come and go; these things evolve. You make new friends. You lose old ones. A precious few survive as friends of yours forever. More important is your career and giving yourselves "the good life," doing well economically. You do that, and everything else will follow. Including friends.

Everything changes in life and not necessarily for the better. We have to change as well.

What is your advice to recent college graduates who have a full-time job and are trying to build up their savings account but pay rent and are paying back mountains of student loan debt, all while trying to maintain a social life? Is this all fair? Of course not. Last year's class came out of school with an average of $37,172 in student debt, far more than past generations. Fortunately, we don't have debtors' prison anymore. You can stretch out your debt payments for years as long as you contribute something toward what you owe on a regular basis. Or you can take an aggressive posture and invest your way out of debt. If your job offers a 401(k) plan, invest in it for maximum growth, not income. Try to put the most allowed into the plan, even if you have to have one less tequila at night. Put a little more into your future, growing your assets, and a little less into your past, paying off loans. I don't mean to give a quick answer to a very complicated question, and college costs are out of control, with often too much money for too little education. But I've always believed that growing assets has been the best way to eventually pay down debt. ◆

Soroff On / Sadie Dupuis

FULL SPEED AHEAD

THE MUSICIAN SOUNDS OFF ON STAGE JITTERS, SYLVIA PLATH AND STUDYING MATH AT MIT.

MUSICIAN, POET AND POLYMATH SADIE DUPUIS, 29, began playing piano as a child and performed with a professional choir. She attended MIT for two years before dropping out to pursue music, but she eventually finished her undergraduate degree at Barnard and went on to earn a master's in poetry at UMass Amherst. She is the guitarist, lead vocalist and lyricist for the band Speedy Ortiz, and she released her first solo album, Slugger, last year under the name Sad13.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Out of all the hats you wear—poet, singer, songwriter, performer—which one fits you the most naturally?
SADIE DUPUIS: I've been playing music since before I have memories, so I guess that. But I view myself as an artist overall, instead of any of those specifically, just because I'm so prone to dabbling. I've spent time as a cultural critic. I've worked as a teacher. Obviously, there's this poetry thing in the mix, but music has been the most consistent thing to me. I was doing it in elementary school, touring in a children's choir.

Do you consider songwriting poetry? Are they the same thing? No, they're very different for me. Certainly I think there are musicians who write poems, but they're different art forms, in the same way that writing an essay is different than writing a novel. You use some of the same muscles, but they're different products.

Why did you choose to study music at MIT of all places? I actually went there to study math. The real question is why did I think I wanted to study math? I went there partially because I was good at math. I went to a small public school in a rural place, and there weren't many girls who were interested in math. So it seemed to me that since I was good at it, I should pursue it. MIT was a great place, but I realized that even though I was good at math, I didn't really like it that much. I got interested in the experimental music program, electronic recording, and I got really involved in the student newspaper. So I thought I wanted to be a writer. And then finally I realized that music was really what I wanted to do.

Worst job you ever had? The first one I had was working on a peach farm, and I never want to return to that gig. It was so hot we had to eat lunch in the freezer. But another really bad job was when I worked in a law firm when I dropped out of school. I kept getting tasked with reading entire cases and trying to find flaws in the lawyers' arguments. I was a college dropout and I had no legal expertise, so it was stressful.

Do you prefer performing or the process of writing and being in the studio? Oh, my God. I love the studio so much more. I am a really reluctant performer. I'm a very anxious person who should really not be allowed on stage. It's bizarre that it's my daily job. Most of my time on stage is spent trying to figure out how not to panic.

Rimbaud or Sylvia Plath? I'm a Sylvia Plath girl. She was one of my first favorite poets, and I went to UMass Amherst to study poetry partly because of the time she spent in Northampton and her legacy there.

Is she your favorite poet? She was when I was younger. I don't know if I have a favorite now, but she's definitely still in my top five.

Finish this poem: Roses are red, violets are blue, Sadie Dupuis is a poet, and ____. She loves Netflix, too.

How would you describe your look? Vague cosplay. I'm not going as any particular character, but I think I'd fit in at the convention. It's easier for me to go on stage if I feel like I'm dressed up as a character. Also, because women are somewhat underrepresented in music, it was important to me to put on a very femme persona. I try to be bright and colorful to show that rock music doesn't have to be this dark thing.

Favorite venue to play? It just closed, but there was this boat in Lille, France, that was really cool. It was just this little sailboat, and I kind of loved it. But in Boston, I like the Sinclair a lot. I don't live in Boston anymore, but I love coming back there to play.

Favorite person named Sadie besides yourself? I'm going to name a contemporary Sadie, Sadie Switchblade, who's been in the band G.L.O.S.S. She's a really great front musician and activist. She's awesome.

Do you have any musical guilty pleasures? I don't feel guilt about pop music stuff, and I do have a tremendous amount of nostalgia for a lot of the Top 40 I listened to as a kid. The things I might feel a little guilty for still liking are the rock bands I listened to as a kid who spread misogyny or weird racial messages.

Best part of touring? Eating!

Worst part? I miss my dog.

How do you stay vegan while you're touring? I've been vegan for so long that it's really not hard. I buy a lot of groceries, and I wind up at Taco Bell more than I expect to. They have a great crunch wrap that you can get vegan, and my bandmates love it. But most of the places I tour are college towns or big cities that have a lot of vegan options.

Do you think this is a moment for women in rock? I think certainly within the indie sphere, we're seeing a lot of women represented. I think we're getting better at featuring people whose gender identity is non-traditional.

Which comes first for you: lyrics or tune? I usually write the music first, and the words will be the last thing I add.

First album you ever bought? I think it was the Mighty Mighty Bosstones.

First concert you ever went to? No Doubt, at the Roseland Ballroom, in I think 1999. I was 10 or 11.

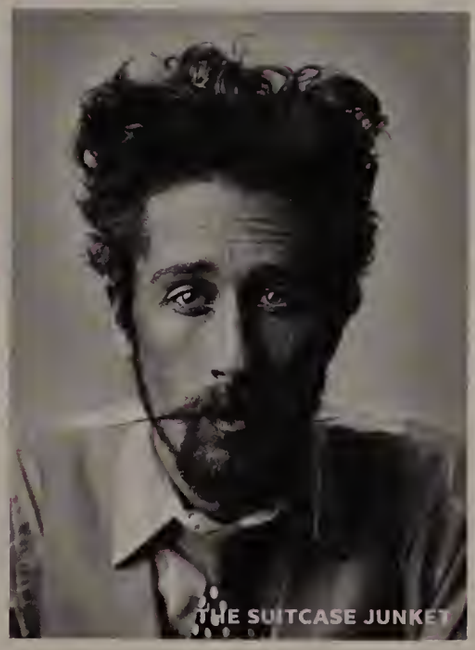
Any superstitions before going on stage? Not before going on stage, but I had OCD as a kid, and I definitely have some things like that that stick with me. I won't let anyone step over my legs. But before I go on stage, it's just getting into the costume and maybe having half of a drink.

Do you feel like you're a product of your era? Yes. I love Twitter, grew up on OxyCube. I still use my LiveJournal. I'm a millennial through and through.

Rock antecedent? I'm gonna pick Beck—we share a birthday, both started off with home-recorded lo-fi, and if I choose him it means I have time to morph my music into glossy, hyper-arranged pop.

Favorite lyric? I'm most excited about new and unreleased music, but it wouldn't make too much sense for you to print those. Let's just say I've got a Lil Jon & the East Side Boyz reference on the next Speedy album. ◆

"I'm a very anxious person who should really not be allowed on stage. It's bizarre that it's my daily job."



LISTEN UP!

Each year, the Boston music scene percolates with bands striving to reach the next level of creativity and recognition. Some artists break out of the gate. Others take a few years to hit their stride, dropping records and live performances that can't be ignored. Here are 10 local acts making those waves.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

CARISSA JOHNSON

The last slot of the night is usually considered an advantage in the Rock & Roll Rumble, but that changed in April when a fire alarm emptied the ONCE Ballroom in the middle of Carissa Johnson's finals set. When the crowd was readmitted, singer/bassist Johnson, guitarist Steph Curran and drummer Nick Hall only cranked harder, unleashing a cover of the Dead Boys' punk gem "Sonic Reducer" and closing with a three-way tribal drum bash into their final chords.

"It tested me," Johnson says of the interruption that became a triumph, as she led the first female-fronted band to win the contest since Amanda Palmer's Dresden Dolls in 2003. "A lot of women came up to me at the end, like 'You did this for all the girls!' I can't believe it's the first time in 14 years. That's crazy."

Johnson hails from Andover. ("There's no music here at all," she says. "It's such a sports town.") She got her start in high school by joining local band Left Hand Blue, building her confidence by playing an all-ages club across the New Hampshire border. And while she cites both Palmer and 1983 Rumble winner Aimee Mann (then of 'Til Tuesday) as influences, her main inspiration is clearly punk rock.

"It means independence to me, freedom, being yourself, standing for what you believe in," Johnson says, naming Joan Jett and the Ramones among her idols. "That's when I really found myself, when I started listening to that music."

Her melodic drive nonetheless adds luster to the pop-punk, borne on her second album, 2016's Only Roses, and standout April single "You Lost You," about waiting for friends who need to go their own way to figure things out. Aided by Rumble studio prizes, she's working on her next full-length album and has spent July touring the West Coast, either with her band or alone with an acoustic guitar.

"It's kind of a weird transition," says Johnson, who writes everything on guitar but plays bass both in her band and with grunge-rockers Swivel. "When I do solo acoustic shows, I can be more intimate with the crowd and try out new songs, [but] if I do two weeks straight of solo shows, I start to really miss the band, that power."

DIABLOGATO

If you want a group where the personality of each member stands out, Diablogato is glad to engage. Scally-capped singer Drew Indingaro roars while fellow guitarist Chuck MacSteven rattles hollow-body rockabilly licks. Johnny Custom balances on top of his acoustic bass like a surfer on his board, while Kim Kendricken blows a baritone sax. And Jesse Mayer, aka Jesse Von Kenmore, bashes a drum kit affixed with Diablogato's three-eyed cat logo.

"It's one of the things I hated about grunge," says Mayer, the real veteran of the band, going back to late-'80s rockers Shake the Faith. "Be entertaining or be gone."

For its part, Diablogato mashes together rockabilly, garage-punk and gothic Southern soul without singular allegiance. "We're not those things, and that's exactly what we are," Mayer says, citing such wide-ranging inspirations as the Replacements, Screamin' Jay Hawkins and X. "If you're not ripping off Little Richard," he adds, "you're doing it wrong."

Diablogato unleashed its self-titled debut last year and recorded two new songs for vinyl release this fall: "Take the Ride" (after Hunter S. Thompson's line "Buy the ticket, take the ride") and "Paint the Devil," which Mayer suggests as Diablogato's best song yet. "Chuck had the old expression 'Don't paint the devil on the wall,' and I was like, 'It's cooler if you do.' And it comes out as the story of a guy who's gonna blow his brains out in a motel room," he says. "It has every element of other Diablogato songs. It's got the rockabilly, but it's also got the creepy."

It's also kicked up a notch onstage, where the black-clad combo flashes serious tattoos, including that crazy cat logo on Mayer's neck. However, the drummer—a classic-car nut along with bassist Custom—counters, "You put us in the room with a bunch of hot-rodders or punk-rock people, and everybody looks the same."

THE SUITCASE JUNKET

Matt Lorenz knows how to manipulate junk to worthy musical ends.

Even as a student of experimental composition at Hampshire College in the early '00s, Lorenz delved into adaptive instrument design. He once assembled pulleys and bicycle brake cables that allowed a drummer whose leg was amputated above the knee to play a bass drum.

THE RUPERT SELECTION

TERENCE RYAN

"That did inform this future that I'm in now," says Lorenz, who lives in the woods near Amherst. "I am in that same world of creating devices to make sounds."

As one-man band the Suitcase Junket, he augments a dumpster-found guitar with rhythms and accents from his mostly metallic menagerie of percussion. That includes a gas can, a pot, a circular saw blade and a box of bones and silverware, plus a hi-hat and a suitcase kick drum. They're all controlled by pedals that he taps with his heels and toes. Lorenz also whistles split tones through throat singing and just added a small, primitive keyboard, feeding everything through dual mics and amps to flip between clean and distorted sounds.

"Take something, 'throw it across the room' and see what it does," the Vermont native says of his approach. "That's true of the objects and the songs as well."

Those songs range from the arty grunge of "The Next Act" and punk-blues stomp of "Evangeline" to the fingerpicked "Busted Gut" and the uplifting "Mountain of Mind," its support for people in transition sealed by a catchy wordless chorus. They appear on Pile Driver, his fourth album and April debut on Signature Sounds, the same label that launched Lake Street Dive.

But it's on stage that the Suitcase Junket truly shines, aided by the well-traveled Lorenz's skills as a troubadour, including his witty rapport with audiences. He's grown locally from tiny stages like Atwood's Tavern to headlining the Sinclair.

One fan in Wisconsin even followed a post-show chat by leaving a raccoon penis bone under his windshield to grace his box of bones. "It took me a few days to open the envelope," Lorenz says of the odd gift. "I was pretty nervous about it."

TERENCE RYAN

The polished production and vocal clarity on Terence Ryan's stunning June debut, Don't Panic, belies the fact that the soulful pop singer recorded much of the album in his Honda Accord while he was homeless for several weeks during an LA sojourn.

"Police were checking me out, seeing what I was doing, because I had a car full of stuff and out-of-state plates, and I was looking a little dirty," the Pembroke native says. When he wasn't hassled, Ryan would charge his laptop with a car adapter, hang a condenser mic from the rear-view mirror and stuff towels in the window cracks. Then he'd stop the engine—and air conditioning—to record vocals.

"It would get like 120 degrees in there," he says of his makeshift studio. "I'd be sweating, dying, and I would turn the car back on and bump the AC a bit to get cooled off. Then I'd turn it back off and do another take."

Ryan had headed west with a publishing deal in hand and a desire to chase a dream. But he eventually realized there was more to the family-rooted routine that he left behind. "You don't see the value of something until it's gone out of your life," he says. "I realized it was time to go home."

Home was where he'd spent long days working in the warehouse of his family's door-hinge business and long nights recording in his parents' basement. "I definitely drove them a little mad with the metronome clicking and the bass going until three in the morning," says Ryan, who also played guitar, keyboards and an 808 drum machine. He was inspired by Kanye West—and many of the rapper's collaborators, particularly Bon Iver, Frank Ocean and Coldplay. Yet, Ryan says, "I've only been able to actually kind of sing in the past two years. Before that, it was fake singing. I never liked my voice or had confidence in it."

Not surprisingly, the track that resonates most, with its simple message and its focus on his voice and acoustic guitar, is "To Live and Die in New England," where Ryan sings, "Come back home to the ones who raised you."

A video with New England scenes—including ones at the warehouse and around his family's Maine fishing house, both of which he used to record other tracks—offers a postcard to working-class life that could entice a chamber of commerce. But Ryan reveals his own dream for "To Live and Die in New England." Much like the Red Sox have "Sweet Caroline," he hopes that the Patriots come calling.

THE RUPERT SELECTION

Manchester-by-the-Sea spawns more than the dysfunctional relationships depicted on the silver screen. Take the Rupert Selection. Guitarist/singer Reilly Somach, bassist Peter Crofton and drummer Zak Brown met in the sixth grade and launched the band after high school in 2011. It's a union rich in chops-heavy chemistry.

AVENUE

"We'd lock ourselves in Zak's parents' garage, and we'd practice three or four days a week or more, four hours at a time—it was insane," Somach says. "It's all kind of unspoken... We don't write anything down. We don't know [music] theory."

He'd been into alt-rock (the Nirvana influence remains) before getting into Phish and psychedelic rock with Crofton, while Brown was more of a metal guy. Add the influence of prog-rockers like Porcupine Tree, the Mars Volta and Frank Zappa, and you have the genre-shifting sonic fights of the Rupert Selection.

"We all get bored easily, so we try to write stuff that keeps us excited and makes it fun," Somach says. "We were always too heavy for a certain group or too jammy for another—and over the years have managed to blend everything together."

They even made the finals of the Rock & Roll Rumble in April, a month after the release of the trio's five-song EP Baseball Practice. Less classically psychedelic than the band's 2015 debut single, "Funeral Party," the record spans the nightmarish instrumental "Tree Hands" ("I really like abstract guitar sounds," Somach says) and the stop-start rush "Sacred Geometry," a showcase for Brown's dynamic drumming.

As for the band's mysterious name, Somach demurs, "Zak had this story about a friend's cat who selected us to be in a band together." Smart cat, that Rupert.

AVENUE

"Everybody's got a gun-jam story," Avenue raps on the title track of his gripping May release Mass Ave & Lenox. He's got a few. Born James Fitzpatrick, he grew up at that junction of the South End and Lower Roxbury, hustling on the basketball court, where he helped Cathedral High School win a 2009 state championship, and on the street, experience that fuels his second full-length album, which includes gritty vignettes about the drug trade.

"The project symbolically was just a way to pay an ode to how the neighborhood was," Avenue says. "For me, it was just community, a community that would stick together. Everybody knew everybody." That dynamic has shifted, however, due to gentrification. "A lot of the same things go on, a lot of the same tensions, but for the most part, it has changed a lot," says Avenue, who moved south of town to raise his young son but regularly returns to his old stomping grounds.

The track "27 Reasons" refers to a raid where 27 people—many of them his friends—were arrested for gang activity. "I always had something that I thought the people in the street didn't have, that provided another outlet," Avenue says, "whether it was school or success from basketball." He pursued both at Merrimack College but was kicked out for selling marijuana.

But music offered an outlet too. His father, who has his own stories about addiction and dealing but now counsels at local prisons, imparted a love for Motown, and he was drawn to Michael Jackson's soulful early music as a kid. Then came the influence of harder-edged storytelling from Jay-Z's 1996 debut, Reasonable Doubt. "Music was one of those things that I'd play with, but I wouldn't really let people know that I did music," Avenue says. "I was writing poetry as a kid."

His mesmerizing roll matches Mass Ave & Lenox's dark, cinematic music layered with soul and jazz samples. Largely produced by the Cooking to Kill team of Frank the Butcher and the Arcitype, the album also features guest rappers from Royce Da 5'9" to Avenue's childhood friend Mwase.

"It's a mixture of a lot of the music I grew up with," Avenue says, acknowledging its contrast with what's popular today. "With Boston rap, I feel like we have artists that are starting to gain their own identity. For the longest time, that was our struggle."

REBUILDER

Sal Medrano fought anxiety and depression as a quiet kid who stayed home and played drums during his middle and high school years. Then, at age 16, he began going to punk shows. "That was the first time in my life where I felt 'This is where I belong,' " says Medrano, who recalls one Kicked in the Head bill with the Goonies at a Knights of Columbus hall. "All the songs were everything I was feeling. And I was like 'Holy shit, this is what I want to do forever!' " He attended so many Kicked in the Head shows that he signed on to sell the band's merchandise on tour.

Eventually, he started his own punk band, Dead Ellington, and sold merch for the Dropkick Murphys, pestering the group for a chance to open a St. Patrick's Day show. When the invite came in 2013, Dead Ellington had broken up, but that didn't stop Medrano from reshuffling former members to launch Rebuilder for that gig.

Medrano's fellow Framingham native Craig Stanton moved from drums to guitar and now shares singer/songwriter duties, while Brandon Phillips set aside his own guitar to drive the drum kit alongside the bass-pumping Daniel Carswell. And in a further effort to build melody and emotion beyond Dead Ellington's skate-punk aggression,

SCHOOLTREE

ALI MCGUIRK

Rebuilder added a keyboardist, a spot now held by Patrick Hanlin.

In September, Rebuilder releases Sounds from the Massachusetts Turnpike, an EP even more bracing than the band's 2015 debut album, Rock & Roll in America. Stanton may have forged the group's best anthem yet in "Mile or an Inch" (with its cathartic line "Swinging for the fences!"). And with "Anchoring," a song about a failed relationship, Medrano again examines anxiety. But he's come full circle. "I've had people come up to me to say 'I feel that exact same way' from a song," Medrano says. "If I can do that for someone else, that's such a big thing."

SCHOOLTREE

There's no question who released the year's most ambitious album on the local scene. That would be Lainey Schooltree, who conjured the 24-song art-rock opus Heterotopia, inspired by '70s concept albums like the Who's Quadrophenia and especially Genesis' Peter Gabriel-era The Lamb Lies Down on Broadway.

"I wanted to do something absurdly grandiose," the classically trained singer/pianist says of the March release, which took four years to complete and spawned an elaborate libretto, plus an illustrated book to follow in September.

"The writing process was a lot of trial and error, because I'd never written a story before," says Schooltree, citing the influence of writings by Plato, Jung, Orwell and Tolkien as well as classic rock and prog, notably producer-artists Kate Bush (whose ethereal sound she most evokes) and Todd Rundgren. "I wanted to put every idea I ever had about society and humanity in there, and it just didn't fit."

Like its concept-album models, Heterotopia follows a protagonist—in this case a rocker named Suzi—on a fantastical journey. She traverses a shadowy parallel world called Otherspace to retrieve her lost body from a "collective unconscious," as Schooltree calls it. "It ultimately boils down to a quest."

There's a political subtext too. "Culturally, we are disassociating from our bodies," says the Rhode Island native, once a vaudevillian cabaret performer. "Especially for women, it comes to mind [with] the whole battle for reproductive rights."

What could be a convoluted mess in less skillful hands glides into an even-toned adventure, both lyrically and musically. Producer/singer Peter Moore (Count Zero, Think Tree) helped her mold different vocal approaches, including a Greek chorus as narrator. Band arrangements prove streamlined, and while it may take time for a listener to distinguish between tracks, some rise above, like "The Abyss" (where her soprano shines in spiraling choruses) and the enchanting "Turning into the Strange."

A multimedia performance of the entire album, aided by a grant from the Boston Foundation, was a success at Oberon this past spring and will be reprised there by Schooltree's band on Sept. 29. And now she faces an age-old dilemma: "Do I try to top this or do something in a completely different direction?"

ALI MCGUIRK

Ali McGuirk almost timidly takes the stage, as if she's a little shy or unsure of her place, glancing around at her fellow musicians. But when she opens her mouth, people stop and take notice, captivated by her swooping, honeyed voice, which sometimes brings Norah Jones or Susan Tedeschi to mind.

"I wish I were a rhythm-section musician, where you can just listen and be in the zone," the singer/guitarist says. "The music is what we're here for, not necessarily me as an individual. I have a hard time pushing myself into that Ali-ego world."

In her own quiet way, the Concord native has steadily pushed forward on her chosen path. McGuirk began singing in a cafe a decade ago as a music minor at UMass Amherst (her major was social thought and political economy). Then she spent almost four years traveling in Central America and doing gigs in Mexico, Greece and Hong Kong before resettling in Boston a few years ago.

This summer, she's been warming up new songs—and a new electric guitar—as she records her full-length debut, set to include material from a well-received EP out last fall as well as a song posted to Bandcamp on Inauguration Day, titled "What Have We Done?"

The song harks back to her UMass major, reflecting on race, class and gender. "I hope to write more songs like that, where I can express a political sentiment in a somewhat unpolitical way," says McGuirk, who's donating half of the track's Bandcamp proceeds to Showing Up for Racial Justice. "That's my white-guilt song," she says. "It's not black people's responsibility to explain racism to white people anymore."

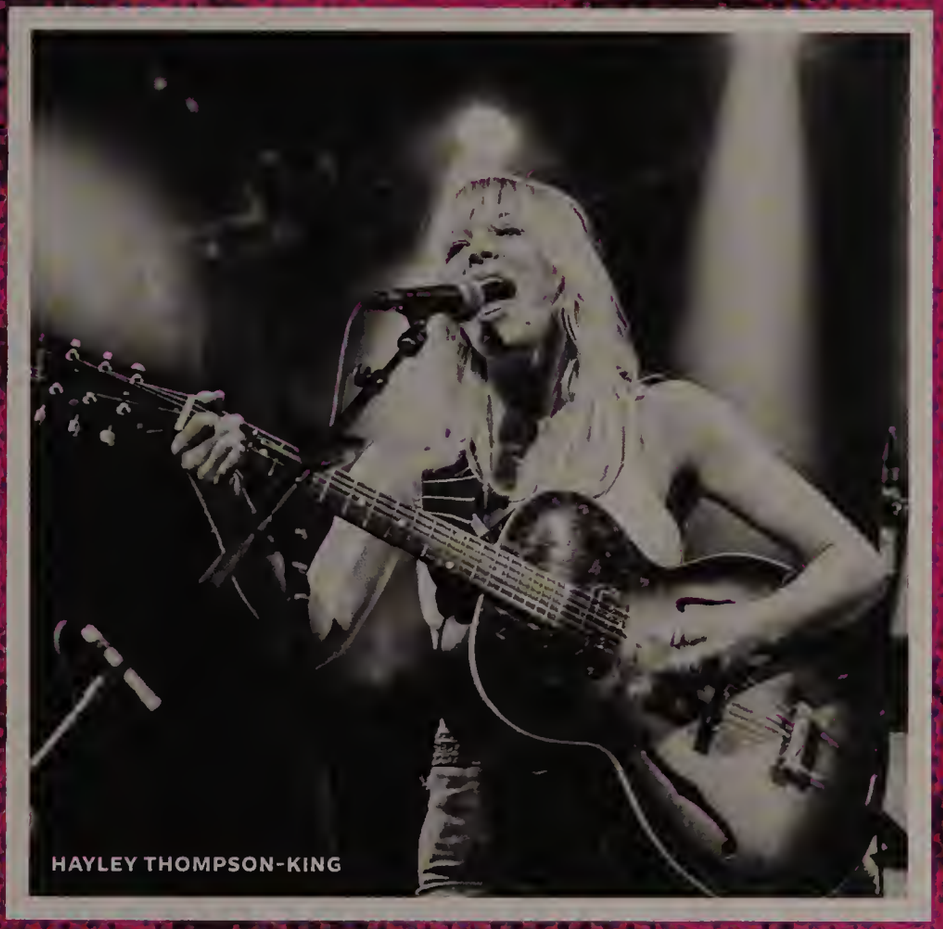
Like most of her album due this fall, "What Have We Donc?" fcatures McGuirk's core band of bassist/singcr Cilla Bonnie, drummer Brandon Mayes and soul-jazz veteran Jeffrey Lockhart, whose liquid guitar notes leave a sonic signature. She might also include horns, which trumpeter Alex Lee-Clark arranged for a song on her EP and a recent Lizard Lounge tribute to the late jazz singer Abbey Lincoln, who joins Aretha Franklin and Sheila Jordan in McGuirk's pantheon of influences.

"Like being inward with my stage presence, I'm kind of inward with my career," McGuirk says. "I want the peak of my career to be when I'm 40, because I like building on it and want to keep playing with better musicians."

HAYLEY THOMPSON-KING

The daughter of a Florida horse trainer, Hayley Thompson-King rode from a young age in a place where cowboy hats and country music ruled. "That's what you were around all the time," she says, "when you're at the barn, at the show, in my dad's truck."



However, Thompson-King owned a big voice full of vibrato and took the unlikely path to becoming an opera singer. She earned a master's in opera performance from New England Conservatory—though she couldn't even speak on her first day, the result of vocal nodes that led to surgery by Dr. Steven Zeitels, who later treated Adele and Steven Tyler. After NEC, she studied in New York with a private teacher from the hallowed Metropolitan Opera. "She'd be dressed as a Valkyrie, and we'd have our voice lesson," Thompson-King says of her dressing room experiences. "We would sing for hours, and then I'd get to go sit in the back and watch her."

Yet Thompson-King ultimately decided that opera wasn't in her cards. "I can't let my art and my life be in someone else's hands," she says. "I had to start writing."

Returning to Boston, she hit the clubs, launching the garage-country combo Banditas, then joining psych-rock stalwarts Major Stars. But again, Thompson-King wanted to establish her own project, which comes to fruition with the Sept. 1 release of her solo dcbut, Psychotic Melancholia.

The album lurches from shriek-laced, ramshackle garage-rockcrs "No Room for Jesus" and "Lot's Wife" (Thompson-King refers to the record as a "Sodom and Gomorrah concept album") to the haunting, psychedelic "Melencolia I" and lush country wecpcr "Old Flames." She's joincd by producer Pete Weiss on guitar and her usual live rhythm section of drummer Jonathan Ulman and Human Sexual Response bassist Chris Maclachlan, who helped rearrange Schumann's "Wehmut" to close the album with a surprise inclusion of her pure opera voice.

"I know stylistically it's not right and people may hate it," shc says. "[But] I'm being super honest and genuine, so why not?"

AGENDA for 7/26–8/8

Rum Runner

A traveling bar pops up in Boston.

THIS SUMMER, WHEN it comes to booze, we're throwing it back. No, we don't mean the dubious return of Zima. We're talking way back, to the "golden age of the cocktail," at The Traveller Bar, a pop-up cocktail bar serving classic libations for a limited time at the Loews Boston Hotel. Fashioned from a repurposed elevator car and featuring just four leather stools and an antique cash register, the bar will pour a menu of retro tipples like an 1895-style whiskey cocktail and a circa-1922 daiquiri, recipes inspired by the vintage books that line the shelves. The Traveller Bar is stopping in Boston for just three weeks on its two-year cross-country tour, so claim a barstool at the Loews now through Aug. 4. Alexandra Cavallo

The Traveller Bar is open Tue–Fri from 4 to 8 pm through Aug. 4 at the Loews Boston Hotel, 154 Berkeley St., Boston, thetravellerbar.com

HIT THE WAVES

Filmmaker Agnès Varda invites viewers to dive into her memories in The Beaches of Agnès, which entails no ordinary day on the shore. Regarded as the grandmother of the French New Wave and the movement's sole female director, Varda is known for her experimental social commentaries, often focused on marginalized female protagonists. But for this 2009 Cesar Award-winning documentary, she uses her own life as her subject, compiling vintage footage as well as present-day interviews with actors from her films to explore themes of love, loss and creativity. Plunge into the past on July 27 as the Brattle Theatre kicks off a monthlong series showcasing Varda's films. / Haley Hill

Reviews by Brett Michel

Baby Driver ★★1/2 British filmmaker Edgar Wright, the director/co-writer behind the "Three Flavors Cornetto Trilogy" (2004's Shaun of the Dead, 2007's Hot Fuzz and 2013's The World's End), has expanded a three-and-a-half-minute music video he made for Mint Royale's "Blue Song" into a nearly two-hour movie. As is usual for Wright, that's about 20 minutes too long. What's unusual, however, is the relative lack of laughs, which have taken a backseat to the film's sense of style. In other words, if you're a fan of Wright's Scott Pilgrim vs. the World, then this movie's tale of a baby-faced young getaway driver who drowns out his tinnitus with classic hits from an endless supply of iPods will likely be right up your alley. I found it a bit inert. Ansel Elgort puts pedal to the metal as the supernaturally gifted motorist named, yes, Baby, who has dance moves to match his driving skills but only half the entertainment value of Wright favorite Simon Pegg. When he meets cute by comparing song titles with Debora (Lily James), the waitress of his dreams, he wants out of the criminal life. Alas, the local crime boss (an oddly paternal Kevin Spacey) won't let him go so easily—not when there's a pretty young girl he and a bank robber (menacingly well-played by Jon Hamm) can threaten as a means of keeping Baby on the road. Race to get the soundtrack, but use caution when deciding to see the film; mileage will vary. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Beatriz at Dinner ★★★1/2 This long-overdue reunion of journeyman director Miguel Arteta and writer Mike White, who last collaborated on 2000's Chuck & Buck and 2002's The Good Girl, begins as a comedy of manners but ends up somewhere more profound. Salma Hayek plays Beatriz, easily the best role she's had since starring in Julie Taymor's Frida Kahlo biography 15 years ago. Though a lesser film might be content to simply set up the put-upon immigrant as the foil for her well-to-do hosts and their guests, Arteta and White also establish Beatriz as a very particular type of West Coast character, a spiritual guide and massage therapist who cares for the sick while neglecting herself. Single, middle-aged and mourning the recent murder of one of her pet goats, she's on a visit with one of her clients, Cathy (Connie Britton), when her Volkswagen breaks down. Stranded at a luxurious Newport Beach estate, the holistic healer is invited to stay for dinner, which doesn't sit too well with Cathy's husband, Grant (David Warshofsky). He's focused on impressing a young couple (Chloë Sevigny and Jay Duplass) and his guest of honor, billionaire real-estate developer Doug Strutt (John Lithgow in Donald Trump mode), who may have more in common with Beatriz than it first seems. While the ending might be a bit of a misstep, Arteta gets good mileage out of the physical discrepancy between Hayek and Lithgow (she's 5-foot-2 to his 6-foot-4). But it's the idealistic differences that cause the sparks to fly. (At Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

The Beguiled ★★★ Colin Farrell's a fine actor, but a whole different beast than Clint Eastwood, who played Cpl. John McBurney in Don Siegel's Civil War-set curio The Beguiled. Like the 1966 Thomas Cullinan novel it was based on, that film featured an injured Union soldier who seduces a school full of repressed Southern belles of all ages as they nurse him back to health, until he pays dearly for his transgressions. Now, writer/director Sofia Coppola has taken her own crack at adapting Cullinan's book, and the results are spare (a supporting slave character has controversially been excised) and far less lurid. Which isn't to say that there aren't pleasures to be had. Like all of Coppola's pictures, it's been sumptuously lit and photographed (on film!), this time by the very talented Philippe Le Sourd, who last shot Wong Kar-wai's gorgeous The Grandmaster. She's also teamed up for the third time with her Marie Antoinette star, Kirsten Dunst, who plays Edwina, a shy schoolmarm who longs to be swept away by Farrell's handsome stranger—but she'll have competition from the likes of Martha (Nicole Kidman), the school's headmistress, and even hormonal teen Alicia (Elle Fanning). But as suggested by the cannon fire and smoke in the distance, violence threatens to enter the frame at any moment. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

The Big Sick ★★★1/2 This film inspired by the real-life courtship of stand-up comedian Kumail Nanjiani and therapist-turned-writer Emily V. Gordon shouldn't be judged by its poster. Based on the promotional image that shows the Pakistani funnyman and his lily-white American sweetheart (played, fetchingly, by Zoe Kazan) posed in front of their culturally mismatched families, I was expecting a big-screen sitcom. But then, perhaps I was subliminally responding to the presence of Ray Romano as the onscreen Emily's dad. Nevertheless, I underestimated him like I underestimated the rest of this film from director Michael Showalter. Sure, it has laughs (it's a Judd Apatow production, after all), and the opening act is a bit of a sitcom, with all the standard tropes of boy meets girl, boy sleeps with girl, boy realizes he's girl's Uber driver when she orders a post-coital ride home from his apartment. But the titular sickness takes the film in unexpected directions. After cultural differences drive our leads apart, Emily unexpectedly slips into a coma, and Kumail gradually gets to know her distraught parents (Romano and Holly Hunter, both very fine), who initially want nothing to do with him. Funny and touching, The Big Sick is a genuine crowd-pleaser of real emotional power. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

A Ghost Story ★★★★ On my way out of writer/director David Lowery's latest, I overheard a colleague referring to it as "Terrence Malick's A Ghost Story."

Advice to Contributors

Submit film listings by mail to "Calendar: Movies" or by email to movies@improper.com. Include address, phone number, date, time, price, nearest T stop and a brief description. Deadline is four weeks prior to publication. Listings not accepted over the phone.

Clearly, he hadn't seen Lowery's earlier feature, 2013's Ain't Them Bodies Saints, which paired Casey Affleck and Rooney Mara in an impressionistic tale set in the Texas badlands, centered on an outlaw prison escapee attempting to reunite with his wife and the daughter he's never met. Lacking a traditional narrative structure or conventional dialogue, filled with non-linear editing and shots of nature, it was as Malick as you can get. In other words, it was as unfriendly to general audiences as Lowery's next film—an incredibly lovely, very loose remake of Disney's Pete's Dragon—was accessible to all who saw it, which sadly wasn't many. Still, we should thank whoever it was at Disney who had the foresight to roll the dice on him, since he used his paycheck from the Mouse House to fund his latest experimental feature, an ethereal pleasure that once again features Affleck and Mara as unnamed lovers—until one of them dies in a car accident. Yes, Affleck plays a ghost, complete with a white sheet draped over his body. Is it silly? Sure. But if you're one of the adventurous moviegoers not bolting for the nearest exit, you'll be treated to a masterful Möbius strip of a movie you might not soon forget. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

An Inconvenient Sequel: Truth to Power ★★1/2 More than a decade after director Davis Guggenheim's glorified PowerPoint presentation (the Al Gore-led global warming documentary, An Inconvenient Truth), Bonni Cohen and Jon Shenk have broken free of the lecture hall format, getting the grayer and thicker Gore out for some needed exercise in this follow-up. Training their cameras on the "recovering politician" as he travels the globe, they capture Gore walking on crumbling glaciers, meeting with world leaders and, yes, inspiring future activists with his well-oiled presentation, which has moved past its slideshow origins. There's now ample footage of natural disasters that can be pinned on climate change, and sadly, as Gore demonstrates with his video clips, some of the predictions that critics scoffed at in Guggenheim's picture have come to pass, like the seawater that flooded the World Trade Center memorial site. Cohen and Shenk probably spend a bit too much time creating a hagiography for Gore, pausing frequently as admirers stop to tell him how much they wish he'd been elected president. But they find their footing as they sprint toward a climax at the 2015 Paris Climate Summit, the results of which should end the movie on a high note. Alas, an unexpected storm cloud in the form of President Trump looms over the film, threatening the climate accord that so many fought for. As truths go, they don't get much more inconvenient. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Lady Macbeth ★★★1/2 A star is born in director William Oldroyd's darkly comic drama, which Alice Birch adapted from Nikolai Leskov's 1865 novel. Her name is Florence Pugh, and if there's any justice, the steely-eyed, 21-year-old newcomer will have a long and fruitful career ahead of her. Ah, but there may not be much justice for the numerous people her scheming character, Katherine, wrongs over the course of the period piece's 89 fleet minutes. Not that it was always this way. In fact, at the film's outset, she shares little in common with Shakespeare's ruthless character; clearly a victim, she's considered the property of her unloving, much older "husband," Alexander (Paul Hilton), whose father, Boris (veteran character actor Christopher Fairbank), has purchased her as the means to provide his son with a male heir. A nature lover, Katherine's not even allowed to venture outside the confines of Boris' country estate. When the men of the house are called away on urgent business, however, her suffocating existence gives way to pent-up sexual longing. She begins a torrid affair with a young black worker named Sebastian (Cosmo Jarvis), which comes as a shock to Katherine's black maid, Anna (Naomi Ackie); both become unwilling participants in her increasingly evil awakening as Katherine blossoms into a psychosexual force to be reckoned with. You might need to take a bath when it's over. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Spider-Man: Homecoming ★★★1/2 I've enjoyed the previous big-screen incarnations of Peter Parker—played by Tobey Maguire and Andrew Garfield—and Sony's five movies did almost everything right once he donned his red-and-blue tights. But as someone who grew up on the four-color adventures of Marvel Comics' The Amazing Spider-Man, I think they missed the target when it came to pinpointing what made Mr. Parker so relatable to young readers: The man behind Spider-Man is no man at all—he's a kid. And 21-year-old Tom Holland is the first actor in this role who actually looks and feels like a 15-year-old. While Maguire never seemed quite at home spouting Spidey's smart-alecky quips, and Garfield sounded cocky almost to the point of being an ass, Holland nails the character's goofy charisma. This shouldn't come as a surprise to anyone who caught Holland's first appearance as the character in last summer's Captain America: Civil War, Spider-Man's debut as part of Disney's Marvel Cinematic Universe. But director Jon Watts (2015's Cop Car) and his team of writers have been smart to set much of their action (and comedy!) in Peter's high school. Think of it as The Perks of Being a Wallcrawler. Robert Downey Jr.'s much-publicized appearance as Tony Stark/Iron Man may be the draw, but by the final frames, Holland is this remarkably fun film's real star. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

War for the Planet of the Apes ★★★1/2 Matt Reeves' latest film opens on a band of heavily armed military men and women hunting for Caesar, the chimpanzee leader of the increasingly dominant apes who gained intelligence during the "Simian Flu" outbreak that decimated much of Earth's human population at the end of Rupert Wyatt's 2011 prequel/reboot, Rise of the Planet of the Apes. But once these soldiers are overrun by a group of horseback-riding apes, writer/director Reeves and co-writer Mark Bomback quickly switch their point of view. In this third part of an unexpectedly fascinating film trilogy (coming after Reeves' 2014 installment, Dawn of the Planet of the Apes), they've made the bold choice to leave the human protagonists behind. It's an inspired move that pays off in spades, since Caesar (once again portrayed by Andy Serkis in an award-worthy motion-capture performance) has become a far more compelling character than the series' Homo sapiens, including a Col. Kurtz-like character played by Woody Harrelson in a derivative supporting turn. Serkis' performance has taken on real emotional dimension, underlined by the frequent close-ups that Reeves employs, a la the Westerns of Sergio Leone. What begins as an Anthony Mann-style revenge picture akin to 1950's Winchester '73 becomes the best prison escape drama featuring anthropomorphized animals since 2000's Chicken Run before winding up in iconic John Ford territory as the sun sets on this latest, greatest installment of the long-running Planet of the Apes franchise. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Wonder Woman ★★★ Leave it to women to show the men how it's done. Patty Jenkins, who's been quietly directing television since making her impressive entry with 2003's Monster, has pulled a superb performance out of Israeli actress Gal Gadot, who stars as Diana Prince/Wonder Woman, a DC Comics character poised to become more popular on cinema screens than even Superman. But then, the bar has been set pretty low by Warner Bros.' previous superhero pictures, beginning with 2013's little-loved Man of Steel and continuing through the critical disasters of 2016's grim and grimy blockbusters, Batman v Superman: Dawn of Justice and Suicide Squad. Jenkins' film is not only brighter, but it offers an honest-to-gosh authorial voice, thanks to her assured direction and a script credited to a lone screenwriter, sometime comic book scribe Allan Heinberg, creator of TV's The Catch. An action movie, a romance, a period piece and a war movie, set during the waning days of World War I, the result is an optimistic piece of pop filmmaking reminiscent of Richard Donner's magnificent Superman from 1978. And though it doesn't soar to quite the same heights, it should satisfy both little girls and grown women alike, whiny fanboys be damned. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

ICE COLD Coldplay just might be the biggest little band in the world. When Chris Martin and company first hit the airwaves with melancholy power ballad "Yellow" off their 2000 debut, Parachutes, they were just a little indie band that formed at uni. Fast-forward four years and the band was shuffling onstage at the Grammys to accept the golden megaphone for Record of the Year. But they've maintained a certain unassuming "aw shucks" likability, which makes their undeniable status as one of rock's foremost arena bands seem surreal (refer to the band getting unceremoniously upstaged at their own headlining Super Bowl gig by Queen Bey). But mega-stars they are, and their just-released EP Kaleidoscope finds the band expanding their pop palette on collabs with the likes of Big Sean and the Chainsmokers. Catch 'em when they headline a little venue known as Gillette Stadium on Aug. 4. Alexandra Cavallo

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

FOWL PLAY Holly Harrison's imagination took flight seven years ago while reading Wallace Stevens' "Thirteen Ways of Looking at a Blackbird." The writer-turned-artist has been incorporating avian imagery into her mixed-media work ever since. Her latest pieces—including By George, seen above—combine photo transfers with painting and collage techniques to dress up endangered species as Renaissance portrait subjects. Harrison's work is joined by that of eight other artists in Abigail Ogilvy Gallery's summer group exhibition, which has Michael Gordon applying meditation principles as he assembles collected posters, flyers and signs and Nicole Patel dyeing fabrics with turmeric and other herbs and spices. It all crops up in The Garden, on display through Aug. 13. / Sarah Hagman

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hard-wood charcoal grilling year round.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Ed Robinson's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

ENTER THE DRAGON

The Asian American Civic Association celebrated its golden jubilee in fitting style with a gala of epic proportions held at the Boston Park Plaza.

After a cocktail reception with an impressive silent auction, the ballroom doors were rolled open to reveal a beautifully decorated venue. Taiko drummers ushered guests inside for dinner, and the speaking program was punctuated by dance performances that were worth the price of admission.

Present and accounted for: emcee Karen Holmes Ward, honorees Stanley Chen and Susan Schiro, Quincy minx Nina Liang, state Rep. Donald Wong, the puckish Michael Kelley, State Street smoothie Gordon Bither, philanthropy bigwig Paul Grogan, affordable housing wizard Peter Madsen and his handsome other half, Tim Linehan, and one person who said, "Politics is for people who don't mind drinking cold coffee out of a Styrofoam cup in a church basement."

However, the evening's best exchange came when one man said, "I want that guy's cognac-colored shoes," to which his friend responded, "Well, don't try to take them off him. He looks a bit like Bruce Lee."

HELLO MUDDA, HELLO FADDA

Drawing Boston's elite to a warehouse at the Black Falcon Cruise Terminal in South Boston takes a bit of doing, but the 10th annual Beach Ball to benefit Camp Harbor View did the trick in a fairly major way.

Spotted in the high-wattage crowd: camp founder Jack Connors, construction mogul John Fish, anchor babe Lisa Hughes and her lovable other half, Mike Casey, reigning goofball Ryan McCourt and his long-suffering wife, Charity, brunette stunner Roberta Weiner and her real estate mack daddy, Steve, every liberal's girl crush, Elizabeth Warren, her senatorial colleague Ed Markey and his wife, Rear Adm. Susan Blumenthal, the impossibly glamorous Maggie Gold Seelig, restaurateur extraordinaire Steve DiFillippo and the gorgeous Pam, newly affianced media power couple Jenny Johnson and Rob Cocuzzo, uber-do-gooder Simone Winston and the handsome Ted, and one woman who said, "If I'd known there were gonna be hot single guys here, I would've done a bit more with my hair."

The warehouse was astonishingly transformed into Studio 54 meets Beach Blanket Bingo. Dinner was delicious and a funk band lit up the dance floor, but the real action was outside by the bar. Overheard: "To quote Stevie Wonder, 'I love you more today than yesterday.' "

"That might be true, but then again, we just met earlier today."

Meanwhile, another guest who discovered a jar of bacon on the bar exclaimed, "Bacon is why God invented pigs!"

But the funniest remark came from Jack Connors, who recounted saying to one of the camp's earliest supporters: "Did you ever think, in your wildest dreams, that all this would happen?" To which the answer was: "Jack, you were never in my wildest dreams."

NIGHT AT THE MUSEUM

You know it's summer when you're at the Museum of Fine Arts in a white dinner jacket, surrounded by a bunch of gorgeous people who are slightly sun-kissed, dressed to the nines and in full-on party mode.

The MFA's Summer Party, the official end of gala season and the start of the livin'-is-easy season, was a Gatsby-esque evening with a French Riviera theme that drew the likes of bespectacled hottie Bill Neidlinger, the sultry Gina Morda, sexy travel exec Jacqui Lewis, Back Bay yummy mummy Christy Cashman, Beacon Hillions Paul and Pia Miller, expectant parents-to-be Nina and William Schroeder, stunning blonde Kristin Vaselacopoulos and fashion avatar Ryan Gavin, Back Bay hipster Devin Hill, reformed ballerina Rachel Cossar, the impeccable Darwin Cordoba and a tortured UPenn grad who said, "The Fighting Quakers? By definition, there is no such thing as a fighting Quaker."

Other amusing remarks: "The new Xfinity cable box is basically a marital aid."

And: "You look great!"

"Thanks. It's all the day drinking." ◆

How do you grow 20 varieties of heirloom lettuce year-round in the city of Boston? What can you make with spicy Genovese Basil? Why do they call it "dinosaur" kale?

We think you should know the answers. Know your farmer. Know where your food comes from. We think buying from farmers, vendors, and artisans should be as convenient as your corner store.

This is why we built the Boston Public Market.

CAUSES OF EFFECTS

WELCOME TO OUR Influencers issue—and no, we don't mean the shiny people paid to plug products on Instagram. We're talking about local notables who are making an impact in Boston and beyond, from a violist shaking up the classical scene to a nonprofit founder turning the gym into a site for social change to our multihyphenate cover subject, MIT doctoral student and Twitter philosopher Jonny Sun. Check out the whole roster in our feature starting on page 40, where all 10 overachievers tell us about the role models who inspired them along the way. Elsewhere, I page through the local zine scene, Jonathan Soroff catches up with CNN anchor and debut novelist Alisyn Camerota, and Paul Robicheau hears from two Grammy winners who've each influenced the other. Happy reading.

A DAY IN THE LIFE – THE BOSTON BARTENDER

It's summer in Boston and everyone knows that after a long day of work, there's always an ice-cold cocktail with their name on it. What some of us don't think about while we're at a desk all day is what the women and men who create these cocktails do with their days. We sat down with Herrel Siller Jr., a fixture of Newbury Street's Cafeteria Boston, to discuss what a day in the life of a Boston bartender entails. Next time you're in bed before midnight, remember there's another life in this city that's still at work around 3 a.m. and they'll be ready for you tomorrow at 5.

WALK US THROUGH YOUR MORNING. I start my day around 9:30-10 am and binge watch shows on DVR. Depending on how the night before went, I'm usually running out to grab a Powerade and a Red Bull. Then, I get my afternoon burrito bowl from Chipotle in Cleveland Circle around the corner from where I live.

DRINK OF CHOICE? Casamigos Blanco, neat. Always. I'm a purist when it comes to my spirits, I like to enjoy the flavor of that fine tequila. This is always my first drink at Sonsie, my "living room" as staff likes to call it, on a Saturday night when I'm closing the bar at Cafeteria.

WHAT ARE YOUR FAVORITE PARTS OF THE JOB? I don't feel like I'm going to work. I'm going to socialize. Socializing from behind the bar is how I've cultivated most of my friendships. But it's not just about the guests. One of the best parts of my job at Cafeteria is the people who I work here with. One of the greatest perks of being in the service industry is that it's a constant social hour at a place like Cafeteria. I'm always around a young and fun atmosphere in the heart of Back Bay. I love those settings where the bar seems like it's small and engaging. We cultivate an environment where people feel open and welcome. I'm very goofy and animated behind the bar. Through that, people forget that there is a barrier between us (the bar)...that's what I love. Where a lot of bartenders think the bar is a barrier between themselves and the guest, I like to find a way to make them forget there is that bar between us.

WHAT HAS MADE YOU SUCCESSFUL AS A MIXOLOGIST? My palate and knowledge of blending flavors from being a chef is beneficial. Part of it is an intangible instinct and part of it has been developed from my education in culinary school. It's chaotic, but I love the chaos! When a customer says "Surprise me," I like to challenge them to identify what flavors they like and even how they are feeling!

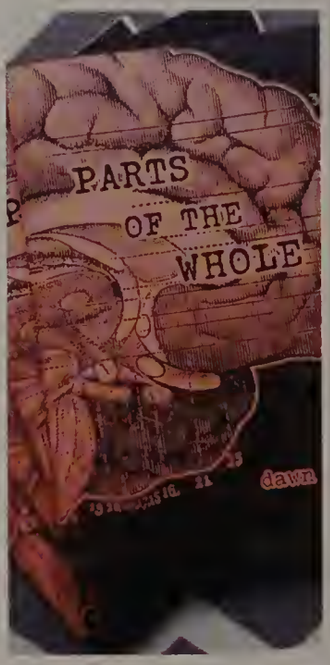
WHY DO YOU DO WHAT YOU DO? The reason why I love doing what I do so much is because I have found this outlet in mixology from something I thought I wanted to do with my life (being a chef). Through many years of reflection and coming to terms that the kitchen life was not meant for me, I've arrived here and I just have a natural affinity for it! It became a dream job for me as I lived the experience. Cafeteria has allowed me to travel the world, which is another passion of mine. I am living the way I've always hoped I could, and that's because of this place and what I do.

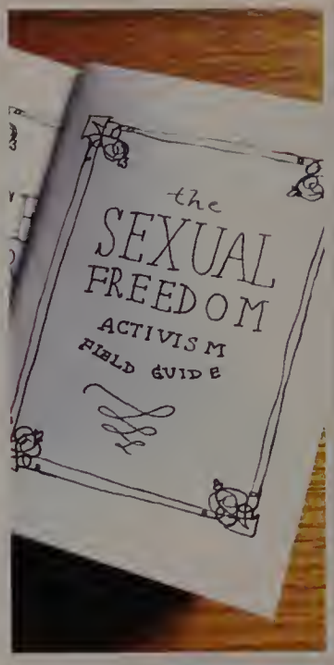
WHAT ARE YOUR FAVORITE DRINKS TO MAKE?

The first is an evening cocktail. I've used this in a few cocktail competitions, a twist on a Moscow Mule.

- 2 oz Sombra Mezcal
- 1 oz lime juice
- 1 dash Angostura bitters
- 2 dashes grapefruit bitters
- 1 ¼ oz grapefruit juice
- Ginger beer to taste
- Garnished with a lime pinwheel

The next is a brunch cocktail. I like this one because it looks beautiful, but you can easily play around with this and make it at home. All the ingredients are easy to find and make. I call it the San Francisco Sunrise.. I highlight San Francisco to pay homage to myself and sunrise because of the color and the energy of Red Bull.





- 1 oz Don Julio Reposado
- 1 dash Angostura bitters
- 1/2 oz blood orange puree
- Splash of fresh orange juice
- Top w/ Red Bull Orange Edition
- Garnished with fresh mint sprig & orange peel

ZINE SCENE!

NOTES ON A DIY FEST AND INDIE PURVEYORS

FINE PRINT: Local zines from Small Supply, Stay Kind! and Pleasure Pie

Zones for Zines

It only takes a few clicks to start making a WordPress or Squarespace site. Social media allows us to share everything from political opinions to avocado toast tableaus with ease. But despite—or maybe because of—the tech-centric time we live in, the appeal of a hand-made and hyper-personal mode of expression endures. And zines, a form favored by sci-fi fans, punks, riot grrls and sundry other subcultures over the decades, aren't hard to find around town right now.

"Our customers love the zines here!" says Holly Sullo, an artist and the lead bookseller at Trident Booksellers & Cafe, which has expanded its selection from a small shelf in the graphic novel department to a whole section on the magazine rack in recent months. Currently it stocks mini-comics distributed by Chicago's Radiator Comics and how-to and political zines from Oregon's Microcosm Publishing, including titles like Let's Talk About Your Uterus and How Not to Kill Yourself: A Survival Guide for Imaginative Pessimists. "They're small, affordable and have such a beautiful sense of personality," Sullo says. "It's like Christmas every time we get a new shipment."

Zines by local makers are making their way to shelves too. Cambridge shop/studio Practice Space's offerings include Somerville artist Tim Devin's What Are you Raising Them For?, a zine on 1970s hippie parenting, and his new release Mapping Out Utopia, which explores Cambridge counterculture in the '70s. (Mark your calendar for Practice Space's Sept. 9 walking tour of Inman Square sites featured in its pages.) And both Practice Space and Salem's HausWitch carry Good Habits, a zine on mental health and self-care by Somerville artist Danielle Freiman, who also sells her zines and others' in her online shop Small Supply.

Lots of such zinesters will convene for the second annual New Zineland fest, a free, all-ages event set to bring workshops, readings and more than 50 vendors to the Cambridge Elks Lodge on Aug. 20. They'll include local activists like Dawn Graham of Stay Kind!, who donates a portion of all sales to support initiatives like the Queer Detainee Empowerment Project, and Nicole Mazzeo of Pleasure Pie, who makes sex- and body-positive zines like Choose Your Own Consensual Adventure. And New Zineland organizer Caitlin Kenney will be launching her own Seek and Find zine series, focused on free and low-cost resources and recreation in Boston, from women's self-defense classes to affordable theater. She's zealous about zines' appeal. "I like something tangible. And quite frankly, I'm tired of reading words off screens," Kenney says. "I think you have a bit more control over who you're getting your messages out to based on your distribution. The internet opens it up to the world, but there's definitely a sense of community when you're trading something you've spent a lot of time to make with someone else and their work. There's a lot more love in it."

Even some members of Gen Z embrace that idea. New Zineland's lineup will also include Manhater Gazette (the name is tongue in cheek), a zine produced by a feminist collective at Brookline High School. "These are all teen girls putting themselves and their writing out there into the local zine scene," Kenney says, "which is incredibly inspiring to see." / Jacqueline Houton

CROPPINGUP

Mark Zappasodi knows that using hops from his Tamarack Farmstead at Silvaticus Brewery, the Amesbury spot slated open at the end of August, gives him a marketing edge—farm-to-growler has a nice ring to it. But there are other benefits to tapping his own crops.

"I do a beer made from spruce tips from my farm, and the benefit of that is I know where my product is coming from. I know how it's raised," he says. "There's going to be a certain flavor to our beers. I've made a beer with 100-percent maple sap and spruce tips from my farm. And to me, it tastes like my farm."

Zappasodi, who's operated the Tamarack farm in Merrimac with his wife, Caroline, for a few years, partnered with his friend Jay Bullen, who was the head brewer at Alaska's 49th State Brewing Co., to open Silvaticus in an old mill building along the Powwow River. The 45-seat brewery will include a semi-circular bar with 12 taps and an outdoor beer garden that overlooks the river. Bullen and Zappasodi expect to use the seven-barrel brewhouse to make beers ranging from saisons to hefeweizens.

"We'll do a hoppy saison called Tamarack Saison with hops grown on my farm. That'll be a first offering, and I think we're going to be open right around hop harvest," Zappasodi says. "I don't have enough hops to support the brewery all year-round, but fall and winter will have more beers made with Tamarack farm hops." / Matt Martinelli

SWEET DREAMS

A COUPLE DRAWS UPON HERITAGE AND HOME COOKING FOR A NEW FINE FAST-CASUAL SPOT.

ANOUSH'ELLA
35 W. Newton St., Boston
(857-265-3195) anoushella.com

NINA FESTEKJIAN HAD LONG entertained the idea of opening a restaurant with her husband, Raffi, but it wasn't until a couple of years ago that they decided to take the plunge. The object of their passion—Anoush'ella—is slated to open in mid-August overlooking Blackstone Square in the South End.

"It was a crazy idea," Nina says with a smile. "We wanted to stay away from the regular, whatever is served as a Mediterranean cuisine, so our menu is based on home-cooked meals that we developed to be [served] fast."

Anoush'ella's concept is fine fast-casual, with m'anoush taking the starring role on an Eastern Mediterranean menu that taps into the Festekjians' Lebanese-Armenian roots. The m'anoush—a sort of thinner flatbread—is cooked on a pan called a saj and then topped with any number of ingredients before being rolled up into a wrap. The 11 varieties will range from za'atar, filled with tomatoes, cucumber, mint, black olives and pomegranate seeds, to lamajun, filled with a lamb and beef mix, tomatoes, parsley and onion. Five sweet versions will include a chocolate m'anoush with Nutella, strawberry, banana, cinnamon, honey and granola as well as an ashta m'anoush filled with ricotta, honey and banana. Other items on the menu include four salads, three grain dishes, four soups and 11 types of strained yogurt.

"We did our own version [of the m'anoush], making it a little bit thicker to roll the dough," Nina says. "I learned a lot [of the dishes] from my mom, all the techniques and everything, and some is intuition too."

The L-shaped restaurant includes a 12-seat communal table running parallel to the bar in the front of the room. The counter for ordering sits in one corner of the space, while more booths and tables are scattered in the back. A 34-seat patio along Washington Street joins the 60-seat interior; customers will find their own seats while they wait for food to be delivered to them. An 18-tap system will include beer, wine and some cordial-based cocktails drawing on a spirit list that will feature arak, an Armenian favorite.

Nina, who has spent more than half her life in the U.S., dug into her background to come up with the restaurant's name, which means "May it be sweet."

"It's about the love and the pride that goes into preparing the food. It's not 'Bon appétit,' but it's similar," Raffi says. "When the person says it, it's about how gratified they are when they're serving it—especially when the person taking it loved it. It's very unique to the Armenian culture."

FUNKED UP: Mike Stark chose black garlic as the bowl's base because he wanted to do something "a little funky."

Good Eats: Bringing the Ruckus

Named after a Wu-Tang Clan song, new Shojo sib Ruckus Noodles has a vibe that is "sort of wild, crazy, loud," says co-owner Brian Moy. "Our dishes speak to that." One such dish is the black garlic mazemen, housemade noodles and melt-in-your mouth togarashi lamb topped with a marinated soft egg, chili threads, sesame and grilled nori for an umami kick. "Mazemen is something you don't see a whole lot of in Boston. It's more of a dry ramen," says executive chef Mike Stark. "The noodle-to-broth ratio is way higher, so there's just a bit of broth in the bottom of the bowl." / Alexandra Cavallo

HOT IN CHILE

Chilean carmenere is akin to South African pinotage, only darker and more sultry. In both cases, a country's one unique and distinctive grape, which used to be undrinkable, is now a delicious and undiscovered bargain. All the $12 to $15 bottles of carmenere on the market today are terrific, to my palate anyway, and that bang for the buck increases exponentially the higher up the price ladder you ascend. What's caused the change from green and mean to lush, supple and silky? Experience. The late-ripening, tough-skinned red grape was planted in sites designed to elongate the growing season, while also providing adequate heat and sunshine to develop complex red and black fruit flavors. Go find these three wines, which are seriously good. / Sandy Block

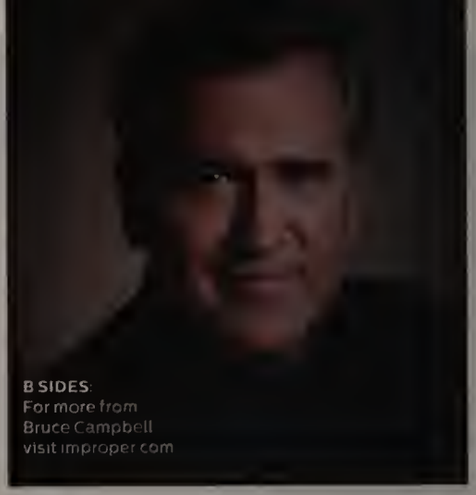
CARMEN GRAN RESERVA CARMENERE EL PENASCO VINEYARD, APALTA, 2014

From one of Chile's legendary high-altitude zones, this wine is what quintessential carmenere is about: violet-scented and fresh with blackberry fruit and undertones of smoked meat, tobacco, pepper and mint. It's velvety-smooth, juicy and soft in tannin, and it kills with anything grilled or barbecued.

$15, Common Vines, Boston

CASA LAPOSTOLLE GRAND SELECTION CARMENERE, RAPEL VALLEY, 2013

This is the producer that almost single-handedly put Chile—and coincidentally carmenere—on the map when the 2005 vintage of its iconic Clos Apalta was named Wine Spectator's Wine of the Year. This wine has a lovely dried-fruit character, with figs and raisiny notes that round out into cocoa, vanilla and roasted nuts. Very sensual and smooth, this mellow style of carmenere can take a light chill and works beautifully with cured meats and other salty flavors.



$12, Blanchards Wines & Spirits Boston

CONCHA Y TORO TERRUNYO PEUMO VINEYARD BLOCK 27 CARMENERE, CACHAPOAL VALLEY, 2015

A perennial favorite, this single-vineyard estate wine is really something special and well worth the price. Aged in French oak, it is ultra-full bodied, with deep blueberry and black-cherry flavors nicely balancing the mocha, nutmeg and bold Asian spice notes. This is the one to reach for if rib-eye is on the menu.

$35, The Wild Duck, Boston

DEAD LETTERS

Bruce Campbell is best known for his role as Ash Williams in the cult horror franchise The Evil Dead, a role he's currently reprising in the Starz series Ash vs Evil Dead. But Campbell is also a director and writer who just released his second memoir, Hail to the Chin: Further Confessions of a B Movie Actor, which he'll share at the Coolidge Corner Theatre on Aug. 18 during an interactive "Last Fan Standing" event. We got him on the line to talk a little schlock shop ahead of that event and an Aug. 19 appearance at Walker Stalker Con at the Westin Boston Waterfront. / Alexandro Covallo

WHAT WILL "LAST FAN STANDING" ENTAIL? Anyone who wants to participate can. It's basically a game show for geeks. It's questions like "How much does Thor's hammer weigh?" None of it would be something you'd hear on Jeopordy. It's all very fantasy, sci-fi, horror oriented.

WHAT'S THE BEST THING ABOUT BEING A B-MOVIE ACTOR? You don't have the same level of scrutiny. Brad Pitt has guys going through his garbage. I don't have that issue. You don't have the exposure, which is fine by me. I make a very good living, but I don't have to worry about security issues. I have a pretty nice, quiet, semi-anonymous life.

WHAT KIND OF HORROR MOVIES DO YOU ENJOY? I like The Sixth Sense, because you get a great twist ending and everything you thought was true was not. I like cerebral horror, like Roman Polanski's The Tenont, where he makes you think you're going crazy. I don't need the torture porn—put a guy's dick in a vice for half an hour and poke it with a stick. That to me is just lazy filmmaking.

DO YOU SEE MORE FANS OF THE ORIGINAL EVIL DEAD OR THE STARZ SHOW AT CONS THESE DAYS? The main difference is actually women. In the old days, my wife used to joke, "You have fun with your 18-year-old boys on your tour." You know, they want to drink beer with you and smoke a doobie. I'm not getting hit on, because it was mostly guys. It's interesting, in horror now and at conventions, 50 percent of the audience is women, and I'm very glad to see that. It's sort of come out of the shadows.

ASHES TO ASHES

A FAMILY REELS FROM TRAGEDY IN A LOCAL AUTHOR'S DEBUT NOVEL.

The Salt House* by Lisa Duffy
Published by Touchstone, 304 pages, $16

IN THIS DEBUT NOVEL, THE DEATH OF BABY Maddie is the start of a family's torment. Then her father, Jack, a Maine lobsterman, has his territory invaded by old buddy Finn, who's returned to these waters seeking fish—bad timing. Meanwhile, mother Hope, in grief, has to abandon the column she writes for a parenting magazine. She and Jack have disagreements over Maddie's ashes; a year after her daughter's death, Hope still isn't ready to scatter them. Remaining daughters Kat, 8, and Jess, 16, have their own sisterly sparrings. And Kat remains unaware that Maddie died after swallowing the locket from her necklace, which had slipped from Kat's neck into her sister's crib as they played.

Much of the wild energy of Duffy's novel arises between Jack and Finn, whose motors roar as they betray and attack each other. Mysterious past conflicts play a part; Jack's angry tension only makes things worse. But then, from out of the darkness comes some surprising grace. Finn's stepson Alex falls for Jess, and her analysis of every word between them is deliciously true to young love. Alex's decency—he seems more the grownup as he talks to Jack—suggests that the younger generation can improve on the older one. And Boon, the steady friend to Finn and Jack, adds balance and sanity.

The tale gains texture from alternating voices—defensively belligerent Jack with his locked-in grief, heartbroken Hope, the cheeky girls slowly learning from their everyday stumblings. Many conflicts remain unspoken as they try to trudge on with their lives. But secrets revealed and the tenderness of memory eventually bring the wounded family together again.

FROM PAGE 214: I couldn't bring myself to touch it, knowing the smell of the blanket would gut me. The softness of it against my cheek would bring me to my knees. The thought of her wrapped in it, fresh and clean out of her bath, would put me on the floor. ◆

RALEIGH RAMBLE

NORTH CAROLINA'S CAPITAL OFFERS A WALKABLE DOWNTOWN WITH PLENTY OF DIVERSIONS

RALEIGH IS MUCH MORE THAN A SLEEPY Southern capital. It offers a wealth of noteworthy dining establishments, craft breweries, a lively arts scene and first-rate museums, all within a compact, walkable downtown. What's more, it's easy to reach—just a two-hour flight from Boston—so it's perfect for a three- or four-day trip.

Start by checking into the revamped Hampton Inn & Suites Raleigh Downtown in the Glenwood South district. The rooms are comfortable, the staff exceptionally accommodating—the on-site security guard is happy to give you a lift in his golf cart—and you'll want to fuel up on the complimentary breakfast since you'll be exploring on foot.

Glenwood South, a neighborhood of repurposed brick warehouses, is home to the Raleigh Beer Garden, which boasts the world's largest selection of draft beer offered in one restaurant. Also notable is the nearby State of Beer. Owned by the local Trophy Brewing Company (and yes, they brew a "Trophy Wife" beer), it's a casual spot that resembles an old-fashioned country store, except that the shelves are stocked from floor to ceiling with beer. Beer-tenders provide expert guidance. Lunch is served seven days a week and ranges from small plates such as pimento cheese and charcuterie to superb sandwiches. Try the Bluebird: smoked turkey, blueberry vinaigrette, white cheddar, pickled red peppers, white onion and mixed greens on thickly sliced artisanal bread.

If you're still thirsty—for beer, coffee or local color—don't miss Devolve Moto. It's a retail/cafe hybrid that's equal parts tough and twee: Locals decked out in tattoos and man buns, accompanied by their itty-bitty dogs, drink honey-lavender lattes and munch buttermilk-fig scones before stocking up on skull rings, utility boots and "Damn Handsome" beard oil.

Take a stroll to the Capitol Area Historic District, a few blocks away, and you'll understand why Raleigh has been called "The Smithsonian of the South." The State Capitol Building, the North Carolina Museum of History and the enormous North Carolina Museum of Natural Sciences are within steps of one another. The last, deservedly the state's single most popular tourist attraction, comprises two buildings connected by an indoor bridge. Highlights include a Living Conservatory populated by tarantulas, milk snakes and a two-toed sloth, a three-story theater featuring a 42-foot-tall screen showing 3-D educational films as well as presentations by guest speakers and scientists, and computer stations that encourage hands-on investigation of robotics and augmented reality technology. You could easily spend an entire day here.

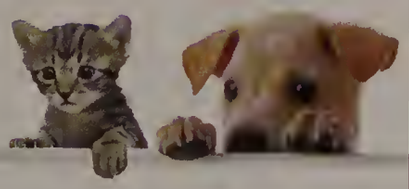
Meanwhile, the Museum of History is currently featuring a special exhibit on the history of Miss North Carolina. Memorabilia such as crowns, gowns and swimsuits commemorate the 80th anniversary of the pageant—and remind you that you're not in Boston anymore. Unlike many museums, both are open most Mondays and admission is free.

At the center of downtown's grid-patterned streets is the State Capitol, a mostly intact exemplar of Greek Revival architecture. Built in 1840, it replaced the original building, which—fun fact alert—burned down in 1831 while undergoing a fire-proofing procedure.

Nearby is the extremely popular Bida Manda, the first Laotian restaurant in the region. Dinner reservations can be hard to come by, so stop in for lunch or a drink to check out the decor. It's a transporting setting of walls covered with hand-tied bundles of sticks (three tons' worth) sourced from North Carolina mountains, reclaimed wood furniture and Laotian art and artifacts. The food is pristinely fresh and flavorful. Try the Hazelnut Manhattan, an on-trend concoction of bourbon, hazelnut, Italian herbal aperitif Cardamaro and black walnut bitters. Next door and under the same ownership is Brewery Bhavana, an ambitious synthesis of brewery taproom, carefully curated bookstore, flower shop and elevated dim sum restaurant: General Tso's chicken is sauced with hibiscus, and the Peking duck is free-range.



But when it comes to fine dining in Raleigh, Second Empire sets the standard—and sets it high. The elegant rooms in this circa 1879 historic home are reminiscent of the former digs of Boston's L'Espalier, and the food is equally exquisite. A dish simply titled "Empire Blue Crab & Pasta Casserole" is a fantastic combination of flavors and textures, the richness of pancetta and red pepper cream sauce cut by the tingle of harissa and balanced with roasted cauliflower and wilted spinach. Most entrees are under $30, and downstairs the Tavern offers more casual fare at even lower price points. Whatever you choose, it's sure to be a memorable taste of Raleigh. ◆

GARDEN OF EATIN'

CULTIVAR GILDS A PROFOUND FARM-TO-TABLE PHILOSOPHY WITH SLEEK URBANITY.

If you've ever walked into a Boston restaurant and had no idea what it was about from the look of the place, you're not alone. There's no such confusion on entering Cultivar, the new fine-dining establishment in the Ames Hotel from veteran chef Mary Dumont (ex-Harvest). Her worship of the fruits of the earth is evident everywhere, from the moss-ball garden hanging in the dining room rafters to the hydroponic garden-in-a-shipping-container on the patio, which generates crates full of fresh produce every week. Alongside chef de cuisine Brian Young, she applies that bounty to plate after Instagrammable plate here, showering them with headily fragrant fresh herbs, sharply flavored microgreens and pretty edible flowers.

That whiff of the garden appears immediately on the complimentary board of terrific rolls with a schmear of cultivated butter dusted with a streak of anise-scented fennel pollen. Elegant, subtle crudos—Italian-inspired dishes of lightly dressed raw fish—get individual verdant accents: spring garlic and pea greens in the Arctic char ($15), English peas and nasturtiums in the mild Jonah crab ($15), Southeast Asian coconut, cilantro, citrus and lemongrass in the albacore tuna ($15). Vivid greens provide the centerpieces of sizeable appetizers like strawberries and prosciutto ($14), a big salad of tender green and white asparagus and lily-pad-shaped miner's lettuce dotted with verjus-pickled strawberries and a few salty strips of prosciutto. The meatier plate of octopus a la plancha ($18), a skillfully tender-cooked big tentacle, gets lovely uplift and balance from summer squashes and fruit, plus acid and brine from yuzu kosho and green-olive crema. In the case of snail toast ($18) with country ham, the vegetal counterweight to the umami intensity is provided by whole and pureed chickpeas plus garlic and Pernod.

Pastas in generous portions offer significantly more richness. Nettle bucatini ($16 half/$28 full) gets more color than pepperiness from the wild green that tints its hollow strands of pasta, but that might reflect the depth of the lamb neck sugo (actually a ragù) and thick dollop of sheep's milk yogurt crowned with mint and pecorino that sauces it. Squid ink messinesi ($17/$30) is similarly intense, its glossy ebony ribbons loaded with tender, big mahogany clams, squid and lobster, with sea beans for crunch and confit tomato for sweet tang. More subtle is the rabbit mortadella agnolotti ($17/$30), a smaller dish filled with a fantastic, meltingly tender variant of the great, fatty Italian lunchmeat, sitting in a pool of superb, lemony rabbit consomme and adorned with shreds of cured egg yolk. Where Dumont's other pastas shout lustily, this one grabs attention with a whisper.

Entrees take big proteins and lavish them with picturesque platings, silken sauces and choice little vegetables. A hefty filet of striped bass ($30) sits atop pan-browned herb gnocchi, fresh fiddleheads and favas, a scoop of ocean-redolent caviar and a creamy chamomile beurre blanc. The substantial, beautifully roasted whole chicken for two ($48) leaves the claws on, fills the white-meat spaces with herby, fine-textured bread stuffing, flanks it with a mess of marsala-braised wild mushrooms, creamy polenta and caramel-toned jus, and showers everything with snipped fresh herbs. Only braised pork cheeks pressé ($28) misses the mark. Gaining an unpleasant grainy/rubbery texture under pressure, it's incongruously paired with a refined Bordelaise sauce.

In addition to his fine savory breads, pastry chef Robert Gonzalez produces beautifully modern desserts, many resembling miniature skylines of geometric solids; he also exploits exquisite local produce, as in his wild blueberry semifreddo ($12) with huckleberry granita and Sambuca-soaked black pluots. Beverage director Dan Lynch likewise takes cues from the herbarium for the stellar bar program, lacing his specialty cocktail list with small-producer, floral backyard gins, as in his Improved Gin-Gen ($14) of genever, gin, maraschino liqueur, absinthe and bitters, served over a big ice ball. Wine director Nick Daddona's list shows admirable range, with usefully modest options like a pleasantly off-dry 2015 Château Belá riesling ($45) from Slovakia, the more familiarly bracing Provençal charms of a 2016 Domaine du Bagnol cassis blanc marsanne rosé ($68) and the silky, legless refinement of a 2001 Domaine Couly-Dutheil Clos de l'Echo chinon rouge ($85). Expense-account diners can find their trophy bottles here, but we mere mortals can find plenty to sensibly accompany a weeknight dinner.

The horticultural theme extends to the restaurant's beech leaf logo, the live-edge wood of the bar and the chandeliers' evocation of winter-bare trees. Service in the 88-seat dining room is uniformly on-point and polished, while noise levels are comfortable for conversation even at peak hours. The roomy 55-seat patio has an uncommonly urban edge for Boston outdoor dining, surrounded as it is by historic old buildings and modern glass-cube skyscrapers at the busy intersection of the Financial District, Downtown Crossing and Government Center. In all, Dumont has accomplished a remarkable feat in her first independent outing: breathing life and fire into the shopworn cliche that is farm-to-table. As it happens, transplanting a carefully cultivated slice of the country into a sophisticated hotel-restaurant setting turns out to be a really, really good idea. ◆

HITTING THE MARK

➜ For the 42nd time, the French Cultural Center shut down its block of Marlborough Street for a festive street party celebrating all things French. The July 14 Bastille Day celebration included music by French performers Ben l'Oncle Soul and Daby Touré and food from local restaurants. While 2,000 people reveled in the streets, 200 major donors enjoyed the sounds from a private party at the center's headquarters.

➜ Courageous Sailing hosted its 21st annual Make-A-Mark celebration on July 18 at its Charlestown Navy Yard headquarters. Local restaurants provided a tasting buffet while the Compaq Big Band supplied dance music under a tent for the nearly 600 guests, who enjoyed the party and auction despite a quick summer rainstorm. In the end, more than $150,000 was raised to support the center's youth development program, which annually reaches a thousand Boston students.

Q: I SEEM TO SWEAT MUCH MORE THAN OTHER PEOPLE; MY SHIRTS CONSTANTLY HAVE WET UNDERARM STAINS AND I HAVE TO CHANGE SHIRTS A COUPLE OF TIME A DAY. ONE OF MY FRIENDS SUGGESTED BOTOX???

A: Actually, yes! Botox can be very helpful for men and women who have severe underarm sweating, or hyperhidrosis. Hyperhidrosis is a condition where the sweat glands are overactive.

Botox is injected into the skin in the armpits, which temporarily blocks the chemical signals from the nerves that stimulate the sweat glands. When the nerves don't receive the signals, severe sweating is significantly reduced. Results usually last for up to six months.

Some people have this treatment on a routine basis, and others choose to have treatment to boost their confidence before special occasions such as a wedding, presentation or an important meeting.

PAST IS PRESENT

KATHRYN BIGELOW HOLDS A MIRROR TO RACIAL INJUSTICE IN HER TIMELY DOCUDRAMA.

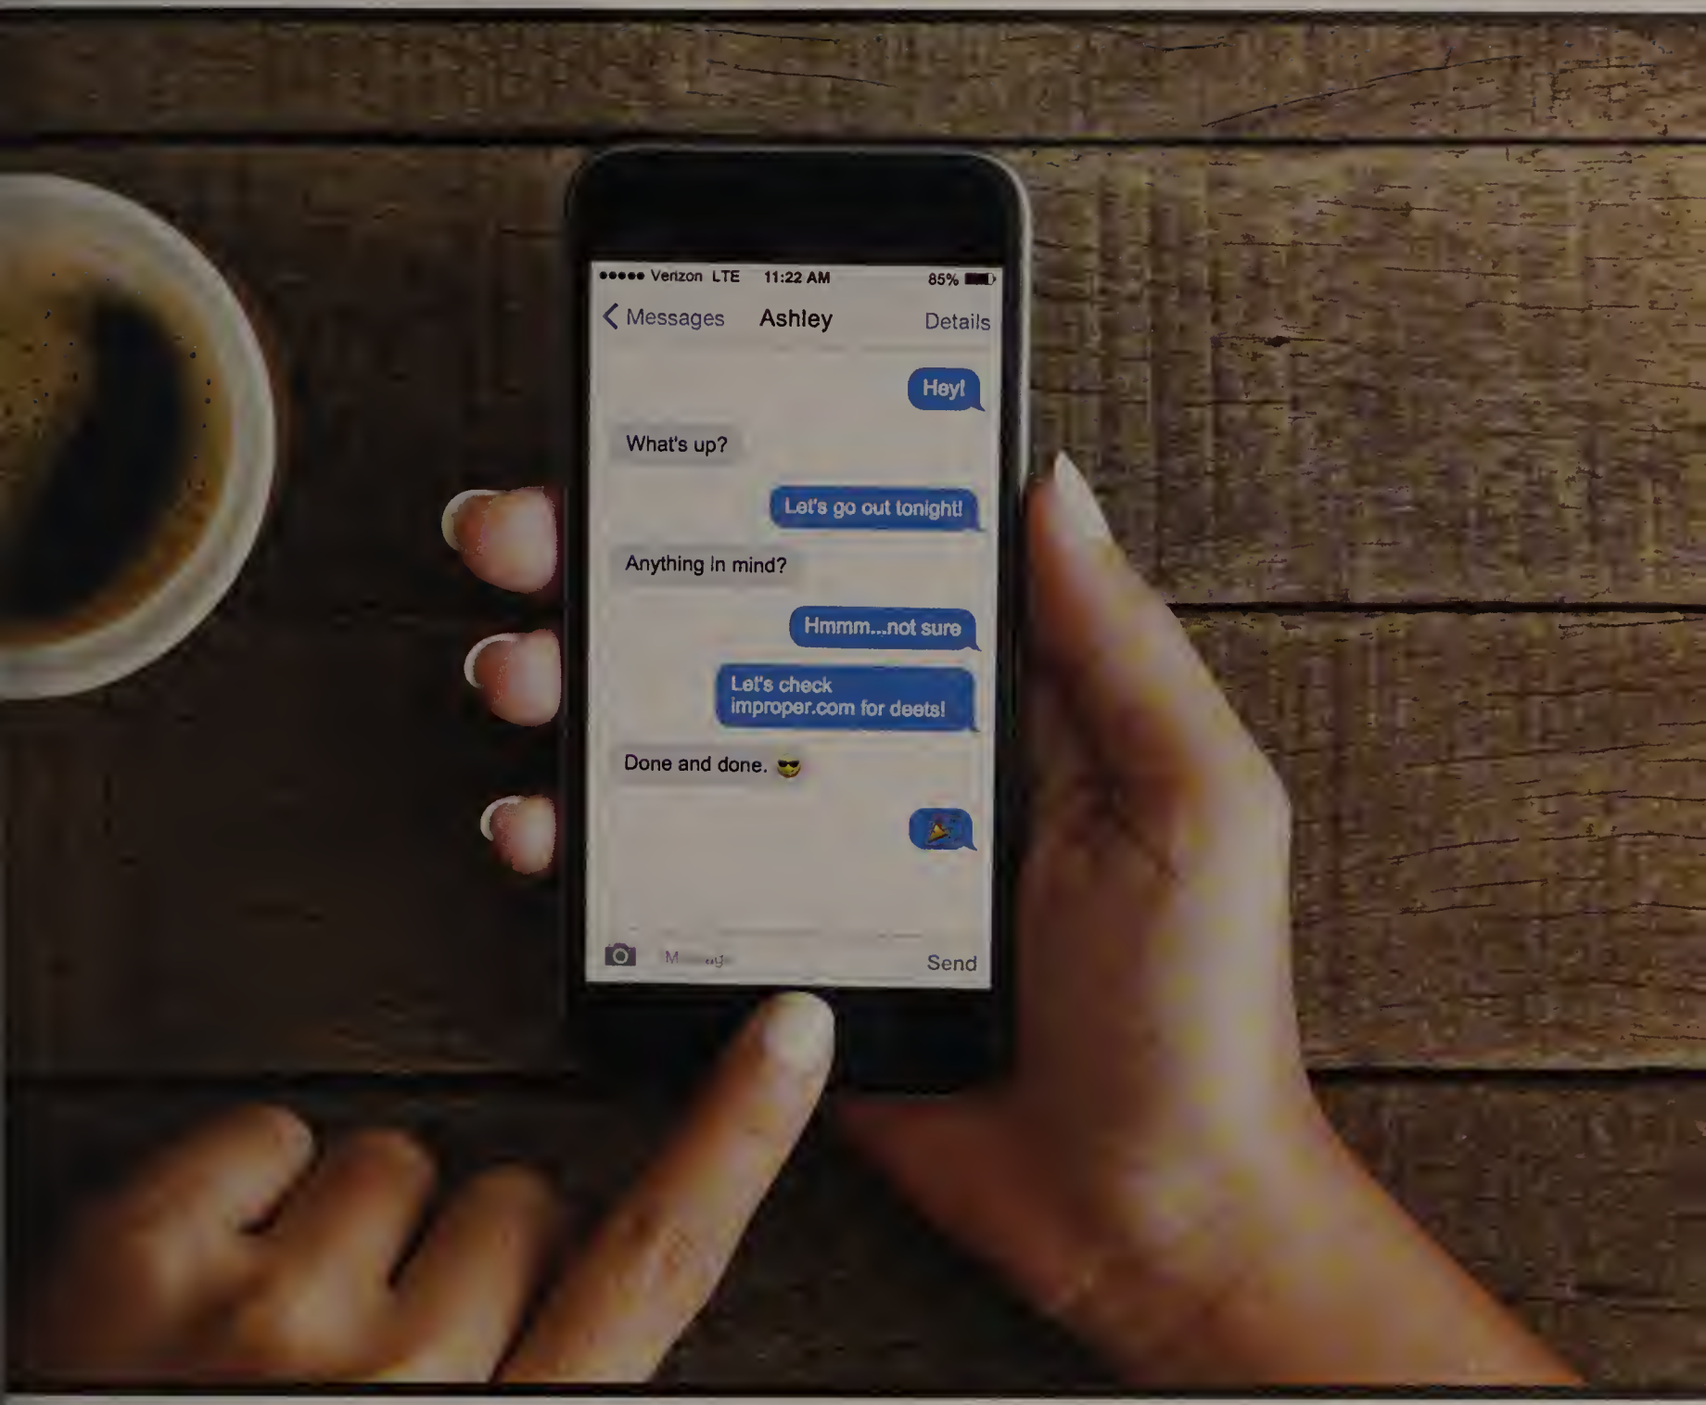
ONE OF THE FINEST FILMS IN theaters right now is a historical drama based on events not widely known to the American public, one set in a burning war zone where the young men whose lives hang in the balance have little hope for escape.

No, I'm not talking about Christopher Nolan's Dunkirk, but about Kathryn Bigelow's Detroit, which finds the Oscar-winning director of 2009's The Hurt Locker once again collaborating with journalist Mark Boal, the Academy Award-winning screenwriter of The Hurt Locker and Bigelow's 2013 film Zero Dark Thirty. Set on a hot summer evening in 1967, their latest work focuses on the civil unrest that swept through the Motor City in the days after a police raid on an after-hours club. Decades of racial repression and injustice fueled rioting and looting that left 43 dead, more than 1,200 injured, 7,000 arrested and at least 1,000 buildings burned.

Two nights after the uprising began, a report of sniper fire sent patrolling members of the National Guard, the Detroit Police, the Michigan State Police and a lone private security guard scrambling toward what they deemed to be the source of the gunshots, a three-story Victorian house that served as an annex of the bordering Algiers Motel. It had been a refuge from the violence, but it would become the site of a massacre.

After riddling the annex with bullets, the law enforcement officials raided the building, rounding up the terrified—and innocent—suspects who were holed up inside. What began as an interrogation rapidly devolved into a kangaroo court as white police officers doled out frontier justice to a group of young black men and the two young white women who had the audacity to be enjoying the night with them.

Bigelow allows the powder keg of history to ignite during the very first frames.



Bigelow has proven herself a master of orchestrating cinematic time bombs. In Detroit, however, Bigelow allows the powder keg of history to ignite during the very first frames. She and indispensable cinematographer Barry Ackroyd (director of photography on The Hurt Locker) expertly merge archival newsreel footage of the riots with vérité-style scenes they filmed in Massachusetts locations, including Boston, Lawrence, Brockton and Lynn. (Who says that tax credit isn't being put to good use?)

Once the violent stage is set, though, Bigelow and Boal begin introducing us to the film's key players—chief among them racist cop Krauss (The Revenant's Will Poulter) and Larry Cleveland Reed (Algee Smith), the young soul singer of up-and-coming group the Dramatics—setting them on a collision course toward the fateful encounter in the Algiers annex, which was filmed inside a Dorchester residence.

Bit by bit, Bigelow ratchets up the tension during the film's extended centerpiece, an hour-long midsection that plays out in real time. Krauss becomes the de facto leader of the raid; having already shot and killed one fleeing suspect in the back, he threatens to kill even more until the gun that was supposedly used as a sniper weapon is produced. Meanwhile, fellow police officers Flynn (Hacksaw Ridge's Ben O'Toole) and the nervous Demens (Sing Street's Jack Reynor) compliantly toe the line. The National Guard wants little to do with the enfolding scene, however, and the state troopers withdraw altogether. Also caught in the middle is a private security guard, Melvin Dismukes (Star Wars: The Force Awakens' John Boyega), a black man accused of being an "Uncle Tom" when he's really just doing his best to keep the peace.

His efforts are of little solace to those bearing the brunt of Krauss' racist theatrics and brutality, however. Beyond Larry, the terrified victims of Krauss and company's assault include Larry's good friend Fred (Collateral Beauty's Jacob Latimore), who uneasily accompanied him to the annex as guests of the free-spirited Julie (Game of Thrones' Hannah Murray) and Karen (Justified's Kaitlyn Dever), and Vietnam veteran Greene (The Hurt Locker's Anthony Mackie), whom Krauss tauntingly accuses of being the young women's "pimp." By the end of this horrific encounter, three of the Algiers' guests will be dead, nine will have been assaulted, and the cops will depart the annex as though nothing ever happened.

In February, Jordan Peele's Get Out offered an explosive critique of racism, but his scares were tempered with laughs; Bigelow offers no such release. Sadly, the type of horrors she's unflinchingly put on display here are as familiar today as they were 50 years ago. ◆

plays the Cape Cod Melody Tent on Aug. 18 and South Shore Music Circus on Aug. 19.

Music / Paul Robicheau

SOUL MATES

TWO BLUES ICONS EXPAND THEIR PALETTE THROUGH JOYOUS PARTNERSHIP.

TAJ MAHAL FIRST CROSSED PATHS WITH Keb' Mo' in the late '60s—but he didn't realize it at the time. The fledgling blues legend was playing a high school assembly in Compton, California, and he made an impression on a student named Kevin Moore, who would eventually pursue a similar musical path under the moniker Keb' Mo'.

They actually met in the early '90s, when a mutual friend brought Keb' Mo' to a studio where Mahal was recording. "He asked me to play a few bars for him on guitar," Mo' says. "I must have done something right, because he introduced me to more people." In fact, the veteran helped the younger bluesman get a record deal.

Now the two Grammy winners have a record of their own, TajMo, supported by a tour that brings the duo and their band (including horns and backup singers) to Hyannis' Cape Cod Melody Tent on Aug. 18 and Cohasset's South Shore Music Circus the next night—in addition to a free Aug. 16 show at Prescott Park in Portsmouth.

"It's great getting to play with Taj every night because I learn something new from him each time," says Mo', still the youngster at 65. And the admiration's mutual for Mahal, 75. "It amazed me how he could just go off on what I was improvising," Mahal says of the co-produced sessions for the record they began in 2014 when their schedules allowed. "We learned a lot from each other."

The resulting album shows that smooth chemistry. "We got soul power," they sing over an African township-jive groove in their ebullient co-written track "Soul." A cover of the Who's "Squeeze Box" adopts a slow, accordion-iced Louisiana feel, and

"It amazed me how he could just go off on what I was improvising.... We learned a lot from each other."

Mahal revisits his cover of Sleepy John Estes' "Diving Duck Blues" from his 1968 solo debut. They take a more straightforward approach with barbed electric blues leads in "Shake Me in Your Arms," and, overall, the two players nestle into a mutual affinity for acoustic country-blues.

Born Henry Saint Clair Fredericks Jr. in Harlem, Mahal grew up in Springfield, Massachusetts. His father was a jazz pianist, his mother a schoolteacher and gospel singer, and they often invited musicians from diverse cultures to the house.

"Half of my ancestors are from the South, and the other half from the Caribbean," he says. "So I grew up listening to everything from rhumba to jazz, blues to classical."

After working on a dairy farm and studying agriculture at UMass Amherst, Mahal moved to Los Angeles and launched the Rising Sons with Ry Cooder, a pioneering blues-rock project that didn't get its due, though Mahal earned the opportunity to work with the Rolling Stones, appearing in their famous Rock and Roll Circus film.

For his part, Keb' Mo' gained an affinity for music from his uncle in Northern California who taught him to play guitar and introduced him to music ranging from the Beatles to Phil Upchurch, a guitarist who blended blues, R&B and jazz. "People always like to put musicians in a box, that they can only play one type of music," he says. "It comes from the old days of telling friends what section they can find your music in at the store."

Of their categorization as blues musicians, Mahal adds, "Look at what Bo Diddley, Jimmy Reed and Elmore James were doing. They added different rhythms like rhumba, swing and cha-cha. We're just playing the music that moves us."

Their album slips in a few guests, including guitarist Joe Walsh and singers Lizz Wright and—mutual past collaborator—Bonnie Raitt, who lends harmony to a closing cover of John Mayer's "Waiting on the World to Change." Released in May but completed before last year's contentious presidential election, TajMo largely exudes a sense of joy and optimism.

"Blues music has always been a place where people can turn in their lowest moments, and we wanted to keep that feeling alive," Mo' says from the end of a European tour. And Mahal adds, "The music is just a reflection of what everyone is feeling right now. We're in a strange place. We like to see music as a way to make people happy and give them a hopeful look for the future." ◆

JAMMED UP

A CHEAT SHEET FOR NAVIGATING BOSTON TRAFFIC NIGHTMARES

THE GLOBE JUST RAN A STORY ABOUT how—get this—traffic in Boston is bad. Which seems obvious, but there's actually data to support your subjective observation that it's worse now, so much worse. Inrix, a traffic data firm, says that in the past four years, the total number of annual miles driven in Boston has increased by 10 percent. Roads, meanwhile, have increased by zero percent (my estimate). And now Comm. Ave. is closed, and all the traffic maps show solid red, and you could make an anatomically correct mold of your ass from the indentation on your driver's seat. Obviously, it's time for new ideas. Luckily, I have some.

First of all, we need to expand our definition of roads. If you live on an intersection, why not charge people to cut across your lawn? I mean, I'm doing it anyway, so I'd be happy to pay you a quarter. If everyone did that, it would go a long way toward fixing your hydrangeas. For a hearty shrub, they sure don't like to be run over. Also fair game: parking lots, horse trails, empty lots and the tops of dams. Life is a highway, and so is that golf course cart path.

How about traveling at odd hours? Supposedly, rush hour is all the time now, but I beg to differ. What if you go to work at 3 am and do a 24-hour shift? Perhaps you'll need a tall coffee toward the tail end of that shift, but the only traffic you'll see is the stuff you're directing up there in the sky. Yeah, the airport brass has beef with you pulling these hours, but that's why you constructed a whole second identity. Now get back to the tower and call a runway for that 737, "Bob Ronkowski."

Or take it a step further and move to the office. A friend of mine who worked for PricewaterhouseCoopers said that they have showers at the office because employees regularly pull all-nighters. It sounded kind of like the Foxconn factory where the workers live in barracks five feet from the assembly lines, except that instead of making iPhones they're appraising underwater chicken houses, which is what I assume PricewaterhouseCoopers does. So I think you see where I'm going with this—if you secretly live at work, you look like a real go-getter while eliminating your commute and probably rent, too. If co-workers ever mention that they'd love to see your place, just say, "Oh, I'd have you over, but we're fumigating for brown marmorated stink bugs." Then that guy will mention your infestation to another co-worker, who will say, "I thought he had emerald ash borers?" For crying out loud, keep your invasive insects straight or this whole charade falls apart.

OK, another idea: You get a car that drives itself. Plenty of cars these days will follow the vehicle in front of you and even steer to keep you between the lines. That won't get you there faster, but you will be more refreshed, at least until your car drives off an incomplete overpass. Alternatively, you could call an Uber. Sure, your driver might want to engage in some light wrestling, but that's a small price to pay for convenience.

Or you could carpool so that you can use the HOV lane. But that'll mean making friends with Lance, who is the only co-worker who lives near you. Lance wears moon boots all year round and uses a standing desk, but get this—he sits at it, in a really high chair, like he's lifeguard of the cube farm. So you're dealing with an hour in the car by yourself or a half-hour with Lance listening to quotes from The Big Bang Theory while choking on Drakkar fumes. Remember that one time his car broke down and you gave him a ride, and he sat in the back even though it was just the two of you? You weren't really against kids being homeschooled until you found out that Lance was.

This is it. We've already built highways under the ocean. It's not getting any better.

You might also consider creative public transportation options. If you live in Hingham or Hull, you can take a ferry, which is like a train that can sink. Ahoy, matey! You'll arrive at work crusted in salt and seaweed, reeking of diesel and squid, but how about that view? I ask you, has Gordon Lightfoot ever been moved to poetry by the T? No. I rest my case. But if you don't live in a salty maritime community, there are other little-known mass-transit options, such as the Medfield Commuter Catapult and the North Shore Express Bobsled (seasonal).

Ultimately, when it takes you three hours to get from Exit 5A to Exit 5B, just remind yourself that all this traffic is ultimately a good thing, a manifestation of a healthy economy and a vibrant society. And also, this is it. We've already built highways under the ocean. It's not getting any better. So you may as well embrace acceptance. Which is the name of your Uber driver. ◆

THIS JUST IN

THE CNN ANCHOR REPORTS ON HER NEW BOOK, TRAILBLAZING JOURNALISTS AND FACE-PALM MOMENTS.

CNN ANCHOR ALISYN CAMEROTA, 51, RECENTLY published a novel, Amanda Wakes Up, that satirizes the world of TV news. Born and raised in New Jersey, she went to American University and for many years worked at WHDH-TV (Ch. 7) in Boston and at America's Most Wanted before becoming the local correspondent for Fox. The network eventually brought her to New York, where she was a co-host of Fox and Friends. She now co-anchors New Day on CNN. She lives in Westport, Connecticut, with her husband and three children.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Three kids. A highly demanding job. How the hell did you find the time to write a book?
ALISYN CAMEROTA: I began writing this book during the presidential race of 2012. So it took a long time. And during that time, I was a weekend anchor, and I filled in during the week. But when you're a weekend anchor, and you're not working five days a week, you really can take up a hobby. It would be impossible for me to do it now.

What inspired it? Well, just to remind people: During the 2012 presidential election, there were some pretty colorful characters in that race. We forget that now, but there was Michele Bachmann. There was Herman Cain. There was Newt Gingrich and Rick Perry. So there was definitely some fodder, I felt, for writing. And at the time, I was personally wrestling with some ethical dilemmas on how to cover all of it. What do you leave in? What do you leave out? What tone do you take? What do you do when people come on the show and you know they're not being honest? So going home and trying to fictionalize it was cathartic. Giving it a kind of satirical slant made it easier for me and less frustrating. It gave me the energy somehow to go back and do it again the next day, and I felt it was really ripe for parody. I didn't originally sit down to write a novel. I was just writing down anecdotes. But they very quickly formed into a narrative.

Journalist you most admire? I'm very grateful to the women who blazed the trail ahead of me, and the deeper I get into my career, the more appreciation I have for Barbara Walters and Katie Couric, and Diane Sawyer. It used to be that women had a shelf life in this business. They broke that. Barbara Walters is working into her late 80s. She certainly broke the mold. So I'm grateful that there's no longer an expiration date on my career.

Why do you think people don't trust the media? Well, I guess because the country has gotten so polarized and partisan, and everybody's in their own echo chamber, so depending upon which way you're inclined, you don't trust the other side. And it's a shame, because there really are facts out there. Journalists really are trying to find the facts. We have all sorts of rules and best practices that we're adhering to, but not all news is created equal, and you really have to consider your source. Because guess what? Your Facebook feed is not as qualified to deliver the news as CNN is.

Worst on-air faux pas? Oh, God, there are so many. I worked for a long time on a morning show that was a bit of a three-ring circus. There were all sorts of funny moments, but one that jumps out at me is that on morning shows, you have to find a time to eat your breakfast, and it's usually during the two-minute commercial break. There was one time when I had just inhaled a spinach omelet and launched into reading these hard news blocks, and my co-host was wildly signaling to me from off-camera that I had something in my teeth. I was trying to just press on, but his hand gestures were getting more and more animated, so I finally just stopped in the middle of the news and said, "Do I have something in my teeth?" He said, "A piece of spinach is blotting out an entire front tooth."

How do you stop yourself from laughing when you have someone in front of you making absurd, patently false statements? Well, I have had a couple of experiences like that. One that went viral was with a panel of diehard Trump supporters who were convinced that 3 to 5 million illegals had voted in California, because they'd read it on Facebook. They said President Obama had told illegal immigrants that they should vote and could vote. Sometimes, it's just so preposterous. I am always interested in hearing the other person's point of view and where they're getting their information. I don't openly laugh, but in that situation I did inadvertently slap my forehead because words failed. As my mother said, "That was so Italian." That's the Italian exclamation point. So I try not to laugh, but sometimes a good face palm does the trick.

Moment in history you would most like to have covered? I was a young desk assistant for Ted Koppel when Nelson Mandela was released. Watching that unfold was so stunning to me, that that happened in our lifetime. That someone went from being a prisoner for 25 years under apartheid to becoming president of the country was just the most jaw-dropping thing for me to witness, and I wish I'd had the chance to interview Nelson Mandela. That would have been a dream.

What's one thing most people would be surprised to know about you? I'm not a morning person. [Laughs.]

Most drastic lengths you've ever gone to for a story? Well, when I was a crime reporter at America's Most Wanted, I went to a lot of lengths. I chased fugitives. I went to scary, backwoods, isolated trailer homes that cops had warned us not to go to, but I had gotten a tip that either the fugitive or someone who knew them would be there. I interviewed serial rapists, mass murderers. I was in a jail cell with them, and they weren't handcuffed. Now, when I think back on it, there were definitely some dicey situations.

Word that always trips you up when you see it on the teleprompter? At CNN, we have so many foreign correspondents in foreign capitals in foreign lands, and I have to make sure I'm not reading the names of those cold. Things like the president of Turkey, Erdogan, is pronounced "Erdowan." Stuff like that.

Ever been starstruck by someone you were interviewing? I am starstruck when childhood idols of mine appear in the studio. I'm really pathetic, actually, because they meant so much to me when I was 5 or 10 years old. For instance, Keith Partridge! David Cassidy showed up, and I turned into the 7-year-old who loved him. I'm completely gaga. Same is true for Paul Stanley and Gene Simmons. I was part of the KISS Army!

Think you'll ever retire? I think about it on days when I'm tired, but I just can't see it happening. I get so much satisfaction from being able to talk to newsmakers and interview real people about how they're feeling. That whole thing about a front-row seat at history is true. ◆

The Leader Board

Who inspires Boston's movers and shakers? Ten local talents making a mark in their fields tell us who influenced them along the way.

BY THE IMPROPER STAFF

Ashleigh Gordon

Violist Ashleigh Gordon has performed around the world, from Hong Kong's Lee Hysan Concert Hall to Paris' Centre Pompidou. But she also enthralls audiences in elementary schools and the Roxbury YMCA. She's the artistic director and co-founder of Castle of Our Skins, a local concert and educational series that celebrates black artistry through music. Named after the opening line of Nikki Giovanni's "Poem (for Nina)," Castle of Our Skins is set to begin its fifth season of concerts featuring music by black composers, which will kick off with string quartet performances at the Museum of African American History on Aug. 25 as part of the Highland Street Foundation's Free Fun Fridays. It also leads educational workshops, like one called Ella Scats the Little Lamb that encourages kindergarteners to make some noise of their own. "It uses a piece by Valerie Capers called Portraits in Jazz that riffs on 'Mary Had a Little Lamb' and teaches kids how to scat sing in homage to Ella Fitzgerald," Gordon explains.

Gordon also works with young people through Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra's Intensive Community Program, which provides high-quality string instrumental instruction to students from communities often underrepresented in classical music. While only a few students have pursued careers in music, all graduates of the program have enrolled in college. "They have a small, close-knit class and a very strong community that takes them from youth through high school. The feeling of family and community and discipline is embedded from an early age, and it's quite special to see," Gordon says. It's a program that's left its mark on her as well. "So many parents whose students I didn't even interact with came up to me and said that my sheer presence as a black woman teacher meant a great deal to them. That sort of jump-started my thinking on how I can use my position as a black woman violist to highlight diversity and promote representation within my field."

Who Influenced You?

For my current mood I would have to say Nina Simone. Shortly after the election, there was a lot of initiative within the arts community about ways of responding and how we can do what we do in solidarity, how we can do what we do in protest. I was just really struck by the call to action and sense of urgency that Nina Simone would speak on on behalf of artists. There is no better time than now to reflect your community and your society and be responsive. You have a duty as an artist, as a creative, to influence, take charge and be vocal."

Jon Feinman

InnerCity Weightlifting builds a lot more than muscle. "We have students who are taking vacations for the first time in their lives. They're able to afford rent. They're able to afford food. They're able to look forward to tomorrow because they know it's going to happen," says executive director Jon Feinman, who launched the nonprofit in 2010 during his final semester of MBA studies at Babson, drawing on his own experience as a personal trainer and his time in AmeriCorps working with young men in the gang MS-13. Today, InnerCity Weightlifting targets young people at the greatest risk for street violence, training and employing them as personal trainers in its Kendall Square and Dorchester gyms. In the past two years, Feinman has seen the average monthly income for his top student trainers rise from $600 to $3,796. But the social capital students develop can be even more powerful than the paychecks.

"We actually just had one student, someone who's had multiple gun charges, get placed in an internship with MIT in the civil engineering department," Feinman says. "We have other students who are having dinner at the homes of our clients who are CEOs and partners at law firms and venture capital companies out in Lexington and Weston and Wellesley." The impact on clients can be transformative too, and Feinman aims to reshape perceptions as much as physiques. "Our clients are overwhelmingly white and affluent and have never known anyone who's gone to jail, never mind someone who's been shot," he explains. "I think what really makes our model work is that the same people who are supposed to be the most dangerous are some of the most caring people you're ever going to meet."

Who Influenced You?

Our students have absolutely been the biggest influence on who I am today and have really helped develop my views on the world—and how we have so much to benefit from connecting with each other rather than avoiding each other.... These are people I've been told to stay away from. When I first came to Boston, I was told, 'Don't cross Mass. Ave. on Tremont Street. Don't go too far down West Newton Street.' I was told to avoid these areas and fell into this system of segregation and isolation. And that wasn't necessarily done with bad intentions. When these things are happening in certain communities, your instinct is to avoid—but that very avoidance creates the circumstances that ultimately lead to cutting the community off from resources, to lack of access to opportunity, to inequality, to the need for the street, which leads to more violence, more logical decisions to avoid a certain area. I certainly fell into that when I first moved to Boston. Now I live on the other side of Mass. Ave. There's no one who can tell me to not go into a certain section or down a certain street. And the reason is I've met our students. I know who our students are as people, not just the stories in the news."

Jonny Sun

Don't try to pigeonhole Jonny Sun. The multihyphenate MIT doctoral student counts researcher, engineer, playwright, comedy writer, author and designer among the many roles on his ever-growing resume. "I don't believe that sciences and creative arts lie on opposite ends of a spectrum, or that they are at odds with each other," Sun says. "What I've found by getting to do work in both is that what I learn and the experiences I gain in one field feeds the other." Recent achievements include the staging of his debut play Dead End in Toronto last fall, a summer internship with Microsoft's AI and Research Group working on yet-to-be-announced projects involving machine learning and natural language processing, co-founding the Online Humor Conversation Series at MIT—a forum where internet comedians, academics and researchers explore humor's influence on the web and culture as whole—and the creation of Twitter bot @tinycarebot, which tweets self-care reminders to nearly 100,000 followers every hour ("Please don't forget to take some time to look up from Twitter," for one).

However, Sun is likely best known for his Twitter alter ego Jonny Sun, an earnest alien who has come to Earth to learn about humans, only to be confused about their language and behavior at every turn. Jonny's Twitter account has gained the humorist more than 480,000 followers, earned attention from The New York Times, Vice, BuzzFeed and Time (which named Sun one of the 25 most influential people on the internet in 2017) and inked him a book deal with Harper Perennial for the self-illustrated everyone's a alieb when ur a alieb too, which hit shelves in June. "I have always felt like an outsider, and I had always felt that my perspective as a writer came out of being the outsider or the Other," Sun explains. "I really enjoy observing and understanding norms, social structures and cultural rules so I can write about them and subvert them."

Who Influenced You?

My high school drama teacher who had always been supportive of my writing told me 'If you can live and be happy without being a writer then you should because it's a difficult life. But if you can't then you will know and it will find you.' What she told me changed my life because it made me realize that it wasn't necessarily my choice to make. That I could plan only so much and that I didn't have to pick one or the other. That to some degree what you're passionate about will find you no matter what."

Diane Paulus

It's no surprise that Tony winner Diane Paulus points to Waitress as a highlight of her directorial career. After premiering in Cambridge, the show debuted on Broadway last year as the first musical to have four different women in the four major creative roles. However, it's a real-life tale of female empowerment from the show's run that sticks out in Paulus' mind. Before the curtain rose for the musical's opening night on Broadway, the entire cast and creative team jammed onto the stage, and Paulus read a note that had been left in the lobby by a theatergoer who had recently seen the play.

"It said, 'Thank you for saving my life. I got out of an abusive relationship thanks to this production,' " Paulus recalls. "There are many reasons we do it, but the idea that we could reach one person and give them the courage—through a musical even!"

The building blocks of musicals—dance and song—have always been interests for Paulus, who grew up playing the piano and dancing ballet a few blocks from Lincoln Center before entering Harvard with a desire to study politics. But Paulus caught the theater bug, eventually earning a master's from Columbia in directing and taking over as the artistic director of Harvard's American Repertory Theater. From The Gershwins' Porgy and Bess to Pippin, she's directed a number of Tony-winning musicals that have blazed a path from Cambridge to Broadway. Next she'll direct two world premieres: February's The White Card, penned by poet Claudia Rankine, and Jagged Little Pill, a Diablo Cody/Alanis Morissette collab slated for May. For Paulus, the prospect of working with two talented teams in back-to-back shows reaffirms why she was first drawn to theater decades ago.

"I loved being in a room and working in a group. I loved that feeling of being part of something that is larger than yourself," she says. "I found that in the theater."

Who Influenced You?

'Eve Ensler. I've admired her from a distance in awe of her. I always felt I was an activist in my heart, back to growing up in New York City and wanting to go into politics. And having this impulse that the world could be a better place, and how I wanted to do that through art. Meeting Eve was kind of the pivot point for me of how one can live and combine all those because she's such an example of that. Getting to know her, getting in her orbit for philosophy, everything that she's been through and what she stands for, and the kind of courage she has as a human being and as an artist... it's been an enormous influence. We did In the Body of the World together last year. I read her memoir and said, 'I want to commission it and adapt it.' It was one of the most incredible collaborations I've had in my life, and we're now collaborating on a new play with her to bring to A.R.T. in a couple of seasons.'

Sheila Lirio Marcelo

Armed with business and law degrees from Harvard, Sheila Lirio Marcelo had her hands full pursuing her career while raising two sons with her husband and taking care of her aging parents. In search of a solution, she first turned to the Yellow Pages, with little success. So in 2006, she founded Care.com, in part to support other mothers going after their professional ambitions. "The biggest factor for GDP growth globally has been women helping in the workplace," Marcelo notes. "Yet the challenges for us in that economic imperative is that there's a lack of care infrastructure; there's a lack of developing the pipeline for women. There's a bunch of different drivers."

Now Care.com is the world's largest resource for tracking down family caregivers—and the first public company to receive an investment from Google. It's readying a rollout of new features for the app and website, but Marcelo's got her hands full with plenty more, serving on the Boston Children's Hospital board, working with public policy nonprofit Massachusetts Competitive Partnership on "women-omics" and mentoring fellow female entrepreneurs at another one of her ventures, WomenUp. And she's not stopping there. "I'm realizing that speaking at more male-dominated conferences and venues is something that's actually really important in the movement to improve female equality in the workplace," Marcelo says. "And part of the reason for that is because there are so few women in the corner offices and on boards. We have to rely on men to make a difference here."

Who Influenced You?

"My parents, because they kind of role-modeled true gender parity. My mom was the main entrepreneur, doing the finance and the business. My dad was more nurturing—but they always worked together, so they didn't fall into the stereotypes. And then George Bell. He was amazing as my boss at Upromise; he's always been an incredible sponsor. I've always been fortunate in my career [to connect with] men who believed in me and helped guide me—Nick Beim, David Skok, Dado Banatao. And of course I also had a few women, like Joanie Nevins, who was a former CFO. But there were few, and that's what I'm talking about. If we want to develop female leaders, we need to have more men, and time, to guide and sponsor women to grow."

Denise Korn

You can find Denise Korn's touch all over town. Celebrating its 25th anniversary this year, Korn Design is a brand strategy and design firm focused on hospitality, lifestyle and culture projects in Boston and across the country. Locally, principal Korn and partner Javier Cortés have helped shaped the look of everything from the logo for Boston Ballet and posters for the Huntington Theatre Company to the Hotel Commonwealth's recent renovations, the Eddy luxury apartments in Eastic and the Pru's current repositioning and rebranding. One such project Korn was particularly excited about was opening the Envoy Hotel in the Seaport in spring of 2015. "I think because it's kind of this convergence of huge demand for an independent, exciting hospitality product in the Boston market and this whole migration of creative industry and innovation moving down to the Seaport," she explains. "We named it the Envoy very, very purposefully, because it's a beacon of what lies ahead."

As for what lies ahead for Korn Design, Korn says she's excited about working on the residences at the forthcoming One Dalton, which is set to be the highest residential tower in New England. "The architecture is very respectful of the context, and it really just puts Boston on the map," Korn says. "It's going to be a huge marker and have a huge impact, in a beautiful way, on the skyline here." She's also made a major impact through her 14-year-old nonprofit, Youth Design, which provides urban teens with mentorships, training and paid summer jobs in design. "I don't like to call it a nonprofit. I really think it's a platform for change, and I really wish we could tap into these incredible points of view more, these visionaries who are unfettered by all the stuff we're held back by," Korn says. "I learn a lot from them and from the teachers who are leading these urban high schools. I find it to be very inspirational, and I take it with me into my day job."

Who Influenced You?

My dad. He's a first-generation immigrant from Eastern Europe. He taught me how to be scrappy, inventive and fearless. I think what they'd call him now is disruptive. [Laughs] He's a pretty well known orthodontist—he worked on Newbury Street for decades. He was this holistic guy who didn't really believe in surgery, he was always thinking outside the box. But I always felt like he was a frustrated architect or something. When you're an immigrant kid, and you're a first generation college-goer, you're expected to become a doctor or a lawyer, so he did that. But he probably could have been an architect.

George Howell

George Howell has been in the coffee business for more than 40 years, but the industry pioneer has news for those who think he should be settling down in his 70s: "We've just begun doing this."

After moving from California in 1974, Howell discovered the coffee scene in Boston was "a real big zero." He soon decided to open up his first shop, the Coffee Connection, in Harvard Square, displaying Huichol art on the walls and introducing local palates to single-origin coffee from farms in countries like Kenya, Guatemala and Costa Rica. After selling his two dozen Coffee Connection stores—and a little drink called the Frappuccino—to Starbucks in 1994, Howell made it his goal to get coffee farms more recognition for their beans. He worked for the U.N.'s Gourmet Project and, in 1999, co-founded the Cup of Excellence in Brazil, where Howell helped foster connections between coffee farmers and companies such as Stumptown, Intelligentsia and Peet's.

"Third-wave was sort of born in that time," Howell says. "They would then go from the Cup of Excellence and go out into the countryside meeting the winning farms and establishing relationships with them to buy their coffee."

Howell started his own roasting operation, George Howell Coffee, in 2003 and has since opened a cafe in Newtonville, a stall in the Boston Public Market and a showcase cafe in the Godfrey Hotel, which offers a menu of single-estate and micro-lot coffee and specialty drinks along with tastings, classes and retail beans from farms in Yemen, Ethiopia and beyond. Howell plans to slowly expand with additional satellite cafes in the Boston Public Market mold as well as one or two more showcase cafes in Greater Boston.

"Where I want to focus is on the cafe because the cafe allows direct communication between us—the roaster and buyer of coffee—and the consumer. It is the direct intersection, and it's only that way that I feel I can effect change," Howell says. "The dream is that sometime from now into the distant future, consumers are looking for particular farms and are asking the roaster how they're roasting it. And it's going more in the direction of the wine industry."

Who Influenced You?

"Juan Negrin. I actually knew him when I lived in Mexico City as a teenager, going to the French high school in Mexico City. And then we went to Yale together as well. He was an artist first, of extraordinary brilliance. But then he gravitated toward working with the Huichol Indians as individual artists, and then through those artists entering into the culture itself and becoming a key connection for that culture with the Mexican government as a go-between and bringing support—cultural, artistic and practical—to them. I exhibited that art for him in Coffee Connection and various art galleries from Los Angeles to New York. Juan's pursuit of the art and the authentic, and the quality he demanded, and his absolute focus on that throughout his life, was the example."

Jody Adams

A James Beard Award winner and mentor to many, Jody Adams has been a fixture on Boston's culinary scene for decades, but stasis isn't her style. Having opened her second restaurant, glittery Greenway hotspot Trade, in 2011, the chef/restaurateur departed her beloved fine-dining flagship Rialto in 2016 after a 22-year run to open Back Bay Mediterranean eatery Porto and casual Greek sandwich shop Saloniki, which now boasts buzzing locations in both Fenway and Cambridge. The latter fast-casual venture might initially seem like a surprising move to diners who savored Rialto's signature slow-roasted duck, but she's brought similarly thoughtful sourcing and depth of flavor to a counter-service context at very palatable price points. And don't expect her to slow down. In addition to lending her time to causes like Partners in Health, speaking at industry happenings like Boston's inaugural Food Tank Summit and presiding over a summer pop-up at the Chatham Bars Inn, Adams has been scouting neighborhoods for future Saloniki outposts. "Be on the lookout for some new locations in 2018!"

Who Influenced You?

Julia Child. I first met her when I was in college. She was doing a demo as a fundraiser for Planned Parenthood, and I volunteered. Years later, I met her again and she directed me to apply for a job with Lydia Shire [another influence]. I learned to do what Julia told me to do. At a time when there weren't many women with a public presence in the food world, Julia stood out as an example of what and who I could be. She taught me the importance of treating all people with attentiveness, respect and generosity—to love what you do, to have fun and to not let anything get in your way.

Karl Iagnemma

Self-driving cars are the future—and that future is fast approaching in part thanks to nuTonomy CEO Karl Iagnemma. One of the few companies building self-driving software, the Cambridge-based nuTonomy started test-driving autonomous vehicles in the Seaport's Flynn Marine Park earlier this year, and its recent partnership with Lyft could mean some Bostonians will be able to hail a self-driving vehicle by the end of 2017.

"NuTonomy in some sense is really an outgrowth of my life's work," says Iagnemma, who established a mobile robotics research lab at MIT after getting his doctorate there in 2001. "All of the technology in driverless cars is robotics technology, so the research I was doing at my lab at MIT, and the research a handful of us were doing worldwide at different universities, has become the core technology for today's driverless cars."

Iagnemma has already helped get nuTonomy's software on the road in Singapore, where public trials have allowed locals to hail rides in autonomous electric cars (which arrive with a nuTonomy engineer who observes performance and can take the wheel if needed). Data from those trials and testing in Boston—where vehicles may encounter very different driving conditions, including dense traffic and harsh weather—will help guide what's likely to be a game-changing technology.

"There's the economic opportunity of being able to offer a mode of transportation that's cheaper than today's available modes," Iagnemma says. "And then there's the potential social impact of improving the technology that today leads to a million-plus deaths worldwide—people getting behind the wheels of their cars."

Who Influenced You?

"At MIT, I had the great good fortune to work alongside professor Woodie Flowers, a legend of MIT's mechanical engineering department. Woodie showed me how a brilliant, humble and ethical engineer comports himself on a daily basis. I consider myself lucky to have been influenced by him."

Jessica Gelman

Jessica Gelman knows a thing or two about winning. As a point guard at Harvard, she was a member of the first Crimson squad to go to the NCAA tourney, winning back-to-back Ivy League titles before a stint as a professional basketball player. She's since spent the past decade and a half working with another powerhouse—the Kraft family—in a role that she says is not too far off from her time as an athlete. "My job was to set people up to succeed on the court... I think the same is true today," says the CEO of the Kraft Analytics Group. The new division grew out of an internal department that analyzed ticket sales, Pro Shop purchases and other numbers to find ways to increase engagement and customer satisfaction among New England Patriots and Revolution fans. Now, KAGR is tasked with leveraging that sort of data on fan behavior for other organizations. Since branching out last year, its staff of 25 has taken on clients in four out of five major U.S. sports leagues, and they're making headway in the college arena too.

Meanwhile, Gelman has seen another one of her undertakings, the MIT Sloan Sports Analytics Conference, grow considerably since she and Houston Rockets GM Daryl Morey founded it 11 years ago as "an excuse to talk and make fun of each other." Today, the annual gathering draws thousands of guests to hear from numbers gurus like Nate Silver. "I think we've helped drive analytics to become mainstream in the sports industry because we're providing a place for really brilliant folks to share what they're doing." And if you're not one of those brilliant number crunchers, well, that's where KAGR comes in. "I think a lot of times people hear what's happening at Sloan, but then they don't know how to actually take it to become a driven organization," Gelman says. "Analytics is scary to a lot of people, and that's OK... That's part of why I gravitate toward what we're doing, because it's making sense of the information and trying to tell a story."

Who Influenced You?

"The Krafts. They're tremendous leaders, very entrepreneurial, innovative; they're hardworking. And they're just really good people too, and that's really inspiring. I feel just so fortunate to have wanted to continue to be learning from them, and I think the biggest thing that I learned early on from them was to think bigger and differently, and not to set limits."

AGENDA for 8/9–8/22

Moon Men

A local band plays the planetarium.

TALK ABOUT STAR power—the Museum of Science brings its Summer Thursdays series to a close this month with an event that reaches for the sky. Its last live music event of the summer welcomes longtime local indie-pop darlings Hallelujah the Hills into the Charles Hayden Planetarium for an immersive stargazing experience. Guests are invited to sit back and be transported to galaxies far, far away as the planetarium's team projects trippy celestial visuals specially created to complement a live set from Hallelujah the Hills (likely drawing from both their most recent album, 2016's excellent A Band Is Something to Figure Out, and fan favorites from the band's decade-plus career). Due to overwhelming demand, the museum is offering two show times, so reserve your seat with a view at the planetarium on Aug. 17. Alexandra Cavallo

Hallelujah the Hills plays at 7:30 and 9 pm on Aug. 17 at the Charles Hayden Planetarium at the Museum of Science, 1 Science Park, Boston. $25, $20 advance. (617-723-2500) mos.org

PERFORMING ARTS

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

GET HOOKED Peter Pan may never have grown up, but Finding Neverland certainly has. Adapted from the 2004 Oscar-winning film, the musical took wing at the A.R.T. in Cambridge before soaring onto Broadway. Directed then and now by local Tony winner Diane Paulus, the show follows playwright J.M. Barrie, who struggled with writer's block until he met the Llewelyn Davies brothers and their mother, Sylvia. Enchanted by the boys' infectious imagination, Barrie found inspiration for the story that would become Peter Pan. Finding Neverland flies back into town for a run at the Boston Opera House on Aug. 8-20. / Noreen Plabutong PHOTO: JEREMY DANIEL

MOVIES

HEATING UP Racial tensions come to a boil in In the Heat of the Night, Norman Jewison's 1967 drama about a black police detective from Philadelphia (Sidney Poitier) who teams up with a bigoted police chief to search for a killer in a small Southern town—that is, after being falsely accused of the crime himself. The winner of the Academy Award for Best Picture a half-century ago, it spawned two sequels and a TV show. Catch the classic at the Museum of Fine Arts on Aug. 11 when it kicks off Feed Your Head: Films from 1967, a series of screenings that coincide with the groovy new exhibit The Summer of Love. / Courtney Garvey

Reviews by Brett Michel

ATOMIC BLONDE ★★1/2 After toiling in the shadows for the last decade as a second unit director on a lot of action movies you've likely seen (Jurassic World and Captain America: Civil War among them), David Leitch co-directed John Wick, but even that went uncredited. But with this stylish Charlize Theron vehicle, he finally graduates to the big leagues, earning his first full director's credit. And as long as Theron's British agent, Lorraine Broughton, is kicking ass, she's in good hands with Leitch, who clearly enjoys putting her through some acrobatic paces, even when she's in stilettos. (I guess we know at least one of the sequences Leitch was responsible for in Jurassic World!) The film bogs down, however, when it sticks to the ridiculously convoluted script by Kurt Johnstad, which is based on The Coldest City, a graphic novel written by Antony Johnston and illustrated by Sam Hart. That city is Berlin in the week before the fall of the wall, a setting populated by double- and triple-crossers, including her contact, David Percival (James McAvoy). Leitch has fun working with the signifiers of 1989, from his music choices to the neon-infused, Patrick Nagel-like compositions he and cinematographer Jonathan Sela create as backdrops for Broughton and sultry French agent Delphine Lasalle (Sofia Boutella). And if the fireworks between these two beauties isn't enough for you, there's always the gunplay with just about everyone else. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

THE BIG SICK ★★★1/2 This film inspired by the real-life courtship of stand-up comedian Kumail Nanjiani and therapist-turned-writer Emily V. Gordon shouldn't be judged by its poster. From the promotional image that shows the Pakistani funnyman and his lily-white American sweetheart (played, fetchingly, by Zoe Kazan) posed in front of their culturally mismatched families, I was expecting a big-screen sitcom. But then, perhaps I was subliminally responding to the presence of Ray Romano as the onscreen Emily's dad. Nevertheless, I underestimated him like I underestimated the rest of this film from director Michael Showalter. Sure, it has laughs (it's a Judd Apatow production, after all), and the opening act is a bit of a sitcom, with all the standard tropes of boy meets girl, boy sleeps with girl, boy realizes he's girl's Uber driver when she orders a post-coital ride home from his apartment. But the titular sickness takes the film in unexpected directions. After cultural differences drive our leads apart, Emily unexpectedly slips into a coma, and Kumail gradually gets to know her distraught parents (Romano and Holly Hunter, both very fine), who initially want nothing to do with him. Funny and touching, The Big Sick is a genuine crowd-pleaser of real emotional power. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

BRIGSBY BEAR ★★1/2 There's a darker movie lurking under the surface of Dave McCary's big-screen directing debut. With TV credits that include episodes of Saturday Night Live, it's no surprise that his first feature is populated by SNL veterans, nor that he bends over backward to make this weird little film likable. That he succeeds is no small feat, either. It doesn't hurt that his lead actor is SNL's Kyle Mooney, who co-wrote this curio's script with Kevin Costello. Mooney plays James, a 30-ish man-child who's spent his life in an underground shelter with his hippie parents, Ted and April (Mark Hamill and Jane Adams), since an apocalyptic event has made the outside air unbreathable. But at least James can look forward to new episodes of Brigsby Bear Adventures, delivered to their bunker weekly on VHS cassettes. This cheapie sci-fi serial would look low-budget on PBS, but the educational tales of a talking, time-traveling bear offer the closest thing to a friend James has ever known. OK, so alert viewers may find a number of oddities here. Chief among them: How does post-apocalyptic life include a Netflix-like delivery service? The truth has a lot in common with the premise of 2015's Room, since James' "parents" actually abducted him from a hospital when he was a child. Shortly after we witness this setup, James is reunited with his real parents (Matt Walsh and Michaela Watkins), but life without new Brigsby adventures proves challenging at best. It's a premise that McCary could have mined for more pathos, but it's sweet enough as is, if you have a taste for saccharine. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

DUNKIRK ★★★ Pity poor Tom Hardy. After appearing as Bane in Christopher Nolan's The Dark Knight Rises, and now as an air-mask-wearing RAF fighter pilot in the writer/director's latest, a fictionalized recreation of 1940's Dunkirk evacuation, it's easy to joke that the British-born actor is destined to have his mouth muzzled nearly every time he appears in one of Nolan's large-scale epics. And large-scale, Dunkirk most certainly is. As such, be sure to see it on film at one of the three local venues projecting it in the 70mm format: the AMC Loews Boston Common, the Coolidge Corner Theatre and the Somerville Theatre in Davis Square. Or, if you're willing to go the extra mile to experience the movie in its best possible format—70mm IMAX—your nearest option is in Providence. Now, if you're asking yourself why I'm focusing so much on the visual presentation of the film, simply put, the visuals are this picture's raison d'être. In fact, Nolan shows very little interest in developing backstories for his characters—you'll be hard-pressed to remember many of their names. So here's a cheat sheet: Mark Rylance plays Mr. Dawson, the civilian captain of a small pleasure yacht who's determined to help get the shellshocked British soldiers off of Dunkirk's beach, where they're sitting ducks for German air attack. Combatting this threat from above is Farrier (Hardy), while newcomer Fionn Whitehead plays Tommy, the grunt we follow for most of the film's fractured chronology, which practically begs a second viewing to piece it all together. Choose your theater wisely. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

presentation (the Al Gore-led global warming documentary, An Inconvenient Truth), Bonni Cohen and Jon Shenk have broken free of the lecture hall format, getting the grayer and thicker Gore out for some needed exercise in this follow-up. Training their cameras on the "recovering politician" as he travels the globe, they capture Gore walking on crumbling glaciers, meeting with world leaders and, yes, inspiring future activists with his well-oiled presentation, which has moved past its slideshow origins. There's now ample footage of natural disasters that can be pinned on climate change, and sadly, as Gore demonstrates with his video clips, some of the predictions that critics scoffed at in Guggenheim's picture have come to pass, like the flooding of the World Trade Center memorial site. Cohen and Shenk probably spend a bit too much time creating a hagiography for Gore, pausing frequently as admirers stop to tell him how much they wish he'd been elected president. But they find their footing as they sprint toward a climax at the 2015 Paris Climate Summit, the results of which should end the movie on a high note. Alas, an unexpected storm cloud in the form of President Trump looms over the film, threatening the climate accord that so many fought for. As truths go, they don't get much more inconvenient. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Lady Macbeth ★★★1/2 A star is born in director William Oldroyd's darkly comic drama, which Alice Birch adapted from Nikolai Leskov's 1865 novel. Her name is Florence Pugh, and if there's any justice, the steely-eyed, 21-year-old newcomer will have a long and fruitful career ahead of her. Ah, but there may not be much justice for the numerous people her scheming character, Katherine, wrongs over the course of the period piece's 89 fleet minutes. Not that it was always this way. In fact, at the film's outset, she shares little in common with Shakespeare's ruthless character; clearly a victim, she's considered the property of her unloving, much older "husband," Alexander (Paul Hilton), whose father, Boris (veteran character actor Christopher Fairbank), has purchased her as the means to provide his son with a male heir. A nature lover, Katherine's not even allowed to venture outside the confines of Boris' country estate. When the men of the house are called away on urgent business, however, her suffocating existence gives way to pent-up sexual longing. She begins a torrid affair with a young black worker named Sebastian (Cosmo Jarvis), which comes as a shock to Katherine's black maid, Anna (Naomi Ackie); both become unwilling participants in her increasingly evil awakening as Katherine blossoms into a psychosexual force to be reckoned with. You might need to take a bath when it's over. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Spider-Man: Homecoming ★★★1/2 I've enjoyed the previous big-screen incarnations of Peter Parker—played by Tobey Maguire and Andrew Garfield—and Sony's five movies did almost everything right once he donned his red-and-blue tights. But as someone who grew up on the four-color adventures of Marvel Comics' The Amazing Spider-Man, I think they missed the target when it came to pinpointing what made Mr. Parker so relatable to young readers: The man behind Spider-Man is no man at all—he's a kid. And 21-year-old Tom Holland is the first actor in this role who actually looks and feels like a 15-year-old. While Maguire never seemed quite at home spouting Spidey's smart-alecky quips, and Garfield sounded cocky almost to the point of being an ass, Holland nails the character's goofy charisma. This shouldn't come as a surprise to anyone who caught Holland's first appearance as the character in last summer's Captain America: Civil War, Spider-Man's debut as part of Disney's Marvel Cinematic Universe. But director Jon Watts (2015's Cop Car) and his team of writers have been smart to set much of their action (and comedy!) in Peter's high school. Think of it as The Perks of Being a Wallcrawler. Robert Downey Jr.'s much-publicized appearance as Tony Stark/Iron Man may be the draw, but by the final frames, Holland is this remarkably fun film's real star. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

War for the Planet of the Apes ★★★1/2 Matt Reeves' latest film opens on a band of heavily armed military men and women hunting for Caesar, the chimpanzee leader of the increasingly dominant apes who gained intelligence during the "Simian Flu" outbreak that decimated much of Earth's human population at the end of Rupert Wyatt's 2011 prequel/reboot, Rise of the Planet of the Apes. But once these soldiers are overrun by a group of horseback-riding apes, writer/director Reeves and co-writer Mark Bomback quickly switch their point of view. In this third part of an unexpectedly fascinating film trilogy (coming after Reeves' 2014 installment, Dawn of the Planet of the Apes), they've made the bold choice to leave the human protagonists behind. It's an inspired move that pays off in spades, since

Caesar (once again portrayed by Andy Serkis in an award-worthy motion-capture performance) has become a far more compelling character than the series' Homo sapiens, including a Col. Kurtz-like character played by Woody Harrelson in a derivative supporting turn. Serkis' performance has taken on real emotional dimension, underlined by the frequent close-ups that Reeves employs, a la the Westerns of Sergio Leone. What begins as an Anthony Mann-style revenge picture akin to 1950's Winchester '73 becomes the best prison escape drama featuring anthropomorphized animals since 2000's Chicken Run before winding up in iconic John Ford territory as the sun sets on this latest, greatest installment of the long-running Planet of the Apes franchise. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Wind River ★★★ Let's get this out of the way up front: Wind River doesn't quite live up to the lofty expectations set by last year's Hell or High Water. With that film and Sicario, Taylor Sheridan has established himself as a screenwriter of uncommon talent, but now that the Sons of Anarchy actor has moved on to directing one of his own scripts, it's clear that he doesn't yet possess the chops of veteran helmers like Denis Villeneuve or David Mackenzie. Migrating north from the Southwestern milieu of his earlier thrillers into the colder climes of Wyoming, Sheridan follows Fish and Wildlife agent Cory Lambert (a quietly commanding Jeremy Renner) as he teams up with rookie FBI agent Jane Banner (Renner's Avengers teammate, Elizabeth Olsen) to investigate the rape and murder of a local girl (Kelsey Asbille from TV's One Tree Hill) on a remote Native American reservation. As you might expect, the antagonistic dialogue that fueled much of Hell or High Water makes a welcome return here, as does one of that film's co-stars, Gil Birmingham. Unfortunately, Renner is also saddled with delivering a few heavy-handed speeches that aren't up to Sheridan's usual standards. The violence that punctuates his scripts is, however, and when it hits, it hits hard—and with poetic retribution. Despite some reservations, this is still a chilling film, one punctuated by the frequent snowfall that fills the frame. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

MUSIC

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

BRANCH OUT There was a time when Michelle Branch's music was, well, "Everywhere." Her 2001 major-label debut, The Spirit Room—from which that hit sprang—spun in dorm room stereos across the country and nabbed major play in spots like a pivotal episode of reality teen soap Laguna Beach. And then, after a 2003 follow-up and a brief foray into country music, she was gone—for more than a decade. But Branch is back, and fully grown up, with her first album in 14 years, Hopeless Romantic. Produced by the Black Keys' Patrick Carney, the record finds Branch shaking off her pop-starlet past and telling the story of the long road she's been traveling through dream-pop, psych-rock and more. Catch her new groove when she headlines the Paradise Rock Club on Aug. 9. / Alexandra Cavallo

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

DUEL PROCESSING Aug. 11 brings a bout for the ages when the Museum of Fine Arts unveils Showdown! Kuniyoshi vs. Kunisada. The new exhibit pits two 19th-century Japanese woodblock artists—both students of the ukiyo-e print powerhouse Utagawa school—against each other, displaying 100 works in color-coded frames: cherry for Kunisada, black ash for Kuniyoshi (whose print Takeout Sushi Suggesting Ataka is pictured here). See how each master tackled the same subject matter, from cheeky theater actor portraits to epic sumo battle renderings, in the Lois B. and Michael K. Torf Gallery, where the rivals go head-to-head through Dec. 10. / Sarah Hagman

A GARDEN PARTY, BY ANY OTHER NAME

If a man's wealth could be measured in roses, Marty Walsh would be loaded: In addition to his lovely other half, Lorrie Higgins, he has the Kelleher Rose Garden in the Fens, where the two of them hosted the 21st annual Rose Garden Party to benefit Boston's public park system.

As always, when it came to hats, guests brought their A-game, among them: blond beauty Adrienne Camire, Antiguan princess Colette Phillips, Downtown Connie Brown, white-hot florist Jimmy Guzman, trouble twins Molly Dunne and Joan Jolley, the always-ready-for-the-Royal-Enclosure-at-Ascot Maggie Ahearn with her other half, Kevin, red-hot mama Kelley Tuthill, BSO babe Kim Noltemy, latter-day Louise Brooks Jane Roy, style avatar Erica Corsano, Chronicle stunner Shayna Seymour, Huntington Theatre Company grand pooh-bah Michael Maso, party pair Lisa and Ron Simons and my fellow hat contest judges, fashion historian Kathleen McDermott, fashion stylist and designer Elisha Daniels and millincr-to-the-stars Marie Galvin. In fact, the only person glaringly absent was one of the event's founders, former Parks and Recreation spokcsperson Mary Hines, who was battling cancer on Cape Cod.

That she was there in spirit was reflected in the roses, though, which never looked lovelier, and which one attendee chose to interpret as a sign that she was doing well.

"I love your fascinator," said one guest, to which the response was "Thanks. It was $12.99 at Target."

Meanwhile, a gorgeous sunset made everyone eminently Instagrammable. As one guest put it, "In this light, I don't even look fat."

UNLEASH THE HOUNDS

It was Bring Your Doggie to Fenway Day when MSPCA-Angell hosted Dogs on Deck, a "bark-tail party" for animal lovers and their four-legged friends. Held on the Third Base Deck at Fenway Park, the evening included an extensive silent auction, a potent signature cocktail, delicious little nibbles and a thoroughly entertaining intertwining of leashes, along with multiple opportunities to use the word "bitch" with impunity.

Front and center: Catwoman Ashley Wisneski, brunette babe Heather Colleary, the always delightful Jessica and Andrew Nigrelli, the Baron of Langley, Stuart Madnick, and his Straight Outta St. Tropez wife, Yvonne, with their aptly named pooch, Bijoux, redheaded radio siren Kennedy Elsey and her main canine, Elvis, a woman who resembled her poodle to a disturbing degree and another wearing a dress with a dog print who carried a handbag shaped like a pug.

The evening's most amusing remark: "Of course I'm great at training dogs. I'm a middle-aged Asian woman without any children."

ROSE FOR DAYS

Everyone got their Gatsby on for the opening night of the Newport Flower Show, which was held at the magnificent Bellevue Avenue mansion Rosecliff.

Looking spiffy while socializing on the lawn were such prominent partygoers as guest of honor and New York style icon Iris Apfel, Preservation Society head honcha Trudy Coxe, Swarovski muckety-muck Russell Pagliughi, floral designer to the rich and famous Jeff Leatham, the achingly lovely Amy Harden with her hale and hearty other half, Paul, equestrian extraordinaire Jonathan Kaye with his gorgeous wife, Lynn, and one guest who said, "That woman's name is Kenya, but she's Mexican. I'm not quite sure what that's about."

Another guest said, "See that guy? My mother had a torrid affair with him for 25 years." But the evening's top remark came when two old friends hugged and one of them said, "I'm gonna squeeze you so hard, Whispering Angel is gonna come out."

THE HILLS ARE ALIVE

The only person who seems not to love Opening Night at Tanglewood is Mother Nature, since it never fails to rain torrentially. Nevertheless, it was a spectacular evening, which began with cocktails and dinner under the Hawthorne Tent, continued with Andris Nelsons conducting the concert in the Koussevitzky Music Shed and concluded with a post-performance reception at Highwood Manor House.

Present and accounted for: co-chairs Liliana and Hillel Bachrach and Martha and Todd Golub, classical music's most beloved cellist, Yo-Yo Ma, his arts consultant wife, Jill Hornor, NBC talking heads Al Roker and Harry Smith, music lovers Cindy and Oliver Curme, the soignee Joyce Linde, radio smoothie Ron Della Chiesa and his better half, Joyce, Beacon Hillion Alli Achtmeyer, fashion plate Carole Rudman and her husband, Ed, mega-philanthropists Katie and Paul Buttenwieser, the fascinating duo of Ranny Cooper and David Smith and one guest who said, "Why do I always forget that wearing heels to this party is a really bad idea?"

Dinner was delicious, and the general consensus was that Mahler's No. 2 never sounded better. Overheard during the cocktail reception: "I'll try not to bore you."

"Oh, good. Start now." ◆

PARTING WORDS

I READ MAGAZINES ON THE TRAIN AND on the treadmill and in the bathtub too. I've loved their magical amalgam of word and image since I was a little kid, when I used to borrow them from the public library. I didn't really dare to think that I'd ever be on top of the masthead of one. So needless to say, it's been an incredible privilege to write this editor's letter for 91 issues, to share the stories of local artists, authors, chefs, scientists and other towering talents I'd never otherwise meet and to collaborate with the most talented, hard-working and big-hearted team a word nerd could dream of. But the only constant is change, and it's time for one for me. I couldn't be more pleased to hand the baton to the eagle-eyed Sarah Hagman, who'll be serving as managing editor, and consummate journalist and incomparable colleague Matt Martinelli, whose face you'll see on this page next time. Thanks to them, to the rest of the staff and to you, our readers. It's been an absolute pleasure exploring Boston with you. See you around town.

NEW GROWTH

A FLORAL DESIGN DUO EXPANDS ITS REACH IN SOMERVILLE.

Sharp Eyes for Style

When Erin Heath and Rose Mattos were considering opening a retail shop, the co-owners of Somerville floral and event styling company Forêt Design Studio were conflicted. So they consulted Mattos' oft-dealt tarot cards. "We pulled the Queen of Swords, which is a woman of empowerment. She's been through a lot, but she can overcome anything," Heath recalls. "And we were instantly like, 'Yes. We're doing this. We have to.' It just melted away all the fears and doubt and questioning."

The duo launched their own Queen of Swords in late May in the same, since-expanded space that houses Forêt just outside Union Square, hosting a grand opening party in August. Flooded with natural light courtesy of a newly installed floor-to-ceiling glass storefront and marked by clean woods and touches of greenery, the shop extends Forêt's aesthetic to a carefully curated collection of home goods, jewelry, bags, accessories, cookbooks, gardening tools and clothing.

"Our whole concept is California meets New England, and that's what we try to infuse in the store," Heath says. "The idea was to make a reflection of who we are beyond flowers. ... Texture is really important to us—we have a lot of clay and woven items and wood." The goods range from statement pieces like linen tassel necklaces by Boston maker Kate Whitehouse and large ceramic knot necklaces from Pittsburgh's Oatmeal Shop to wild sage from Brooklyn's fair-trade indigenous goods shop Incausa, black tea soap from Paris and scarves from LA's Block Shop. A small selection of clothing, mainly jumpsuits and kaftans in cool raw silk and linen, includes a collection made with fabric loomed in Lowell. "We thought that was really cool, that the actual fabric itself was made here," Heath says.

Indeed, she and Mattos source many of the products from female makers and small women-run companies, as well as brands that donate to causes like the ACLU. "We care about not only where our flowers come from but where our products come from," Heath says. "There has been a higher focus on women-driven products, but I think we're trying to bring in some more things that are for everyone." That includes a set of discreet oblong ceramic pipes made by a husband-and-wife team in California. "A lot of people are like 'I'd keep this on my coffee table,' " Heath says with a laugh. Their customer base also includes Forêt's bridal clients, who are drawn to a selection of unique bohemian jewelry and accessories like hand-forged brass bun pins.

"We're kind of a destination stop," Heath says. "We're not Newbury Street; we're not getting the same kind of traffic. So we've noticed that a lot of people will come here seeking out what we have." / Alexandra Cavallo

The first Legal Sea Foods restaurant opened in 1968. It was a small no-frills place where you paid before you ate, and the food was served on paper plates. It was a simple formula – offer only the highest quality, freshest seafood with fast and friendly service. Legal Fish Bowl is a modern interpretation of this heritage. Because five decades later, it's still all about the fish.

NIGHT & DAY: Explorateur will offer a range of food and drinks from pastries in the cafe to cocktails at the bar

EXPLORING BIG IDEAS

A NEW MULTI-FACETED SPOT WILL SERVE FARE FROM MORNING TILL NIGHT.

EXPLORATEUR
186 Tremont St., Boston
explorateur.com

AS THE OWNER OF MANY NIGHTCLUBS, Ed Kane could be viewed as a gatekeeper to the nightlife scene. But when it came to getting a seat in a cafe near Boston Common, even the co-owner of the Big Night Entertainment Group was out of luck.

"I'm a coffee guy. I love coffee. But you can't get in anywhere. I challenge you to get in. Everyone's occupied with laptops. It's so discouraging," says Kane, who is set to open Explorateur, a cafe and restaurant that will operate seven days a week on the first floor of the Grand Masonic Lodge at the corner of Boylston and Tremont Streets. "I thought, 'I'll make something that has nice turnover in the front cafe, and if you want to bury yourself in your laptop, we'll have this amazing library room next door where you can have a meeting or you can just work in there.'"

Slated to open in late August, Explorateur has wire-glass windows that stretch along Tremont Street, adding life—and flower boxes—to what had been a walled-off streetscape. The 66-seat cafe in front has a pastry counter on the left with white subway tiles and large menu boards behind it. The cafe will operate from 7 am till the kitchen closes, serving an array of housemade pastries such as a sourdough-based doughnut made from a 90-year-old starter, plus La Colombe coffee and other grab-and-go treats. Customers will also be able to order from the sit-down breakfast menu, featuring items like lemon ricotta buckwheat pancakes and a soft egg scramble with chives as well as a selection of four different toasts, from avocado-topped to mushroom-topped. The formal lunch menu includes sections for soups, salads, flatbreads, sandwiches and toasts and larger entree-style dishes such as steak frites and chicken paillard. Spillover from the cafe can be accommodated in the adjoining library room (set to open in September), which will seat 88 at long library-style tables.

"If you want to work on your computer for hours and hours, go to the library. There's tons of room there," Kane says, hoping the 12-seat communal tables in the front of the cafe will be for customers staying 30 minutes or less. "Nobody does breakfast, lunch and dinner and marries them all successfully. The first restaurant I opened, Stars, was that format. I always wanted to do another one, but it's 30 years later and so you gotta do it differently."

In the main room, a raised dining area includes large semicircle banquettes. Chefs Michael Morway and Jacob Mendros will marry French favorites with California twists, serving a dinner menu that features sole meuniere, duck confit, braised short ribs and butternut squash agnolotti as well as flatbreads and large-format dishes such as tomahawk de boeuf and grilled whole branzino. To the right of the dining area are high-top tables and a 36-foot pewter bar, where beverage manager Gina Goyette will serve cafe-inspired cocktails like a Thai iced coffee with sesame-infused Jameson and condensed coconut milk.

Explorateur marks the start of a busy stretch for Big Night, which will open Scorpion Bar in the Seaport later this year. But for Kane, Explorateur holds special meaning. "The project on the waterfront costs much more, but I go there for 10 minutes a day. I love this one," he says. "That one is beautiful, but I feel like this one will really reflect what I like."

GO FISH: Puro also offers a menu of similarly tasty crudos and carpaccios.

Good Eats: Raw Talent

The team behind the South End's Kava Neo-Taverna is stripping down with Puro Ceviche Bar, a seafood spot that debuted in late May on Newbury Street. Puro serves a variety of small plates, but the main attraction is the ceviche bar, which turns out brightly flavored, prettily plated dishes such as the sea bass ceviche. Made with chunks of black sea bass, red bell peppers, chili peppers, red onion, cilantro, aji Amarillo, lime juice, olive oil and passion fruit, it's a summery standout among a number of dishes that make use of the tropical fruit. "It's a nice citrus fruit, which makes a really nice touch with the sea bass," says chef Jesus Preciado. "It's the perfect balance between the softness of the fish and the sweet and sour of the juices." / Alexandra Cavallo

FEET FIRST

American Ballet Theatre's Misty Copeland made history when she was named the company's first black female principal dancer, but that's just the tip of the iceberg when it comes to the accomplishments of the leading lady and best-selling author, who first stepped into a ballet studio at age 13. Copeland drops by the JFK Presidential Library and Museum for a chat with WBUR's Meghna Chakrabarti on Aug. 28, and we got an early word / Sorah Hogmon

GOOD POINTE: Check out a webcast of the conversation with Copeland at jfklibrary.org.

IN YOUR MOST RECENT BOOK, BALLERINA BODY, YOU TALK ABOUT THE IMPORTANCE OF FINDING MENTORS. WHAT'S ONE PIECE OF ADVICE FROM ONE OF YOUR MENTORS THAT'S BEEN TOP OF MIND FOR YOU LATELY? What has been top of mind for me is, try to enjoy the journey. As ballet dancers, we work so hard to get the opportunity to perform lead roles in the classical ballet repertoire, and I am grateful to have had the opportunity to perform several of my dream roles, such as Kitri in Don Quixote, Giselle, Odile/Odette in Swon Loke and Juliet in Romeo ond Juliet. As much as I want to always do my very best on the stage, I'm learning to appreciate the good and the not-so-good moments. There is no such thing as perfection, but as artists, we strive for it. I now know that every day is a new opportunity to do better, to be better. So yes, I'm enjoying this journey.

YOU ALSO TOUCH ON JOURNAL ENTRIES FROM WHEN YOU WERE FIRST PROMOTED TO PRINCIPAL DANCER. WHILE PLENTY OF PEOPLE WERE CELEBRATING YOU, OTHERS EXPRESSED DOUBT, AND YOU NOTE THAT THIS MADE YOU QUESTION WHETHER YOU DESERVED IT. ANY TIPS FOR WHEN THOSE FEELINGS OF SELF-DOUBT CREEP IN? My motto has become to not allow other people's words to define you. It's hard in this age of social media to block out the negativity, but it's so important. When you take on other people's negative perceptions of you, it weighs you down. And when that happens, it's not possible to give your all or best. Surround yourself with people who support you and truly want the best for you

IS THERE ONE ROLE YOU HAVEN'T YET PERFORMED THAT YOU'RE ITCHING TO? Most recently, I got to perform Princess Praline for Alexei Ratmansky's Whipped Creom, which was so much fun. I'm looking forward to guesting with the Australian Ballet in November to perform as Aurora in The Sleeping Beauty for the first time. I'm really living my dream.

IF YOU HAD TO PURSUE ANY OTHER CAREER—EVEN IF YOU DIDN'T THINK YOU'D BE INCREDIBLY SUCCESSFUL—WHAT WOULD IT BE? I think I would always be doing something in the arts or in a creative field. It's in my blood. I also really love to cook, so most likely a chef.

WHAT'S THE SECRET TO A TOP-NOTCH BALLERINA BUN? Slick your hair straight back at the nape of your neck and put your hair in a band. Twist your hair, wrap your hair around the band really tight, then place another band around the bun; layer on top of the bun to secure it. This allows you to take it down quickly without the fuss of pins

LIAM NEESON

PRICE: $14

INGREDIENTS: Toki Whisky, Bénédictine, absinthe, Lagavulin and Yellow Chartreuse

BACKGROUND: "I have different goals when I approach cocktails," PAGU wine steward Larry Rubin explains. "I'm all about playing with aroma, flavor and the way they interact with each other."

FLAVOR PROFILE: First your nose detects intense smokiness. "It smells like you're drinking straight Scotch whisky," says Rubin, who sprays the tulip-shaped glass with the Islay single malt and sets it aflame with absinthe for a hint of licorice. "But then once you actually get into the drink, there's this really nice, smooth palette that makes it perfect for summer"—even sans citrus. The two-ounce pour of Japanese whisky is met with a "salt and pepper" dash of Bénédictine and Yellow Chartreuse, plus a bit of sugar "to mellow out the drink a little bit."

PAGU
310 Mass. Ave., Cambridge
(617-945-9290)
gopagu.com

NAMESAKE: After a movie marathon, Rubin was taken with the Irish actor's role of an ex-CIA agent turned kidnap-avenging father in the blockbuster action franchise. He drew parallels between the Token character Bryan Mills—"this really rugged, tough guy with a rough past who just loves his daughter and family"—and the cocktail's coexisting strong and gentle sides.

SECOND ROUND: The self-professed wine nerd suggests a glass of the pinot noir-like Descendientes de J. Palacios Petalos ($15) for Scotch, bourbon or rye drinkers. "It's not very heavy; it's not very oaky. There's a real clarity of fruit and earthiness... It's just got that similar spice complex thing going on." / Sorah Hogmon

A VACATION TO DIE FOR

A GETAWAY WITH THE GIRLS TAKES A TERRIFYING TURN IN A LOCAL AUTHOR'S NEW THRILLER.

The River at Night* by Erica Ferencik
Published by Gallery/Scout Press. 320 pages. $16

THIS NOVEL OFFERS AS MANY THRILLS as the whitewater rapids where its four central women go rafting. The Wonder Woman-ish Pia organizes the trip with her friends, cancer survivor Sandra, the blunt, now-sober Rachel and our narrator, Wini, a graphic designer for a food magazine in Boston who's reeling from two blows: her recent divorce and the loss of her beloved mute brother, Marcus. The foursome is led into the wilds of Maine by a handsome guide, the 20-year-old Rory. But friendships start to splinter as Pia makes noisy love with Rory in the next tent.

Dangers bring exhilaration as the group whooshes through turbulent waters and around car-sized rocks. But suddenly, Rory is killed in an accident, and the women are on their own. After losing their raft, they stumble upon a bizarre duo deep in the woods. Mother Simone lives with her tongue-less son, Dean—there's a story there—surviving on wild animals whose severed heads adorn their camp. With creepy friendliness, she invites in the four friends. Wini knows signing from communicating with her brother and connects with the confused Dean, who's been under Simone's control for years. He becomes torn between his loyalty to Mama and his new affection for these women, whose adventure turns into a harrowing fight for survival. Ferencik blends the friends' affections and discords with excitingly described water heroics, and Wini's protection of Dean brings added heart into these wild woods.

FROM PAGE 213: I felt a rush of water behind my head. Rachel's feet frog-kicked as she swam, her shorts and tank top billowing out underwater, black hair waving. She began to surface but fought it. Rolling, bubbles silvering out of her mouth, she struggled to unsnap and free herself from her life vest, which floated up like an orange balloon. She kicked off into the dark water, and I followed her bright blue water shoes. ◆

GET YOUR GOAT

A REVAMPED RESORT WELCOMES PLEASURE SEEKERS TO NEWPORT'S GOAT ISLAND.

Goat Island is said to have earned its name in the 1600s, when early Newport Colonists used the small strip of land in Narragansett Bay as a grazing ground. In the centuries since, it's been home to a burial site for a whole crew of pirates, an Army fort and a U.S. Naval Torpedo Station that made missiles through two World Wars. And since the '60s, it's manufactured good times as a destination for vacationers. Over the decades, the island's lone hotel property has been a Hilton, a Sheraton, a Doubletree and a Hyatt. Its latest incarnation, Gurney's Newport Resort & Marina, welcomed its first guests this summer (along with a pair of resident goats, Cornelius and William, named for the Vanderbilts behind two of Newport's most jaw-dropping "summer cottages"—aka mansions).

A sister property of Gurney's Montauk, the refreshed resort is a certified scene at sunset on a summer Saturday, when revelers of all stripes—families and festival-going hipsters, bros and bridal parties—converge on the Regent Lounge's three-level deck, festooned with fairy lights and fire pits. Walk down it and you'll find a path that unspools to Newport's only outdoor hotel pool and an expansive sundeck lined with lounge chairs and cabanas. Forgot to pack your suit? Stop by the pop-up shop that's been selling chic swimwear on the adjoining lawn all summer. Work up a thirst with all that lounging? Just beyond the pool is the Pineapple Club, an outdoor bar proffering grilled bites and the Lobster Pink Smash, a concoction of Elijah Craig bourbon with watermelon puree, lemon and mint. All of these outdoor spaces have a view of the water, but Gurney's grounds also offer a variety of vantage points—Adirondack chairs, swing benches, hammocks—mere feet from the bay. Claim your choice of front-row seat, watch the sailboats breeze by and wait until your heart rate slows to meet the rhythm of the waves.

After drinking in the views, you can sup at Scarpetta, the onsite Italian restaurant and the fifth sibling outpost of the New York original. Decked out in cream and tan leather with big windows looking out on the 22-slip marina, it sets the indulgent tone starting with bread service, a spread that arrives with mini stromboli to slather with olive oil, butter and eggplant caponata. Don't fill up too much, though—delectable crudi and housemade pastas await.

As for breakfast, you can order an avocado tartine from room service or grab a pastry and a red beet latte from Corso Coffee in the lobby. Thus fortified, you'll be ready to explore the sights. Parking downtown in peak season can be a challenge, to put it mildly, but you can opt for a bike rental, the resort's launch service or the shuttle service that crosses the short causeway bridge connecting Goat Island to the rest of Newport. Close by is the plaque-bedecked historic district, home to one of the country's densest concentrations of preserved Colonial buildings, including the White Horse Tavern. Billed as the oldest bar in America, it's been serving patrons since 1673.

Move from the 17th century to the Gilded Age with a tour of one of the Newport Mansions, from Rosecliff, host of June's annual flower show (and a current exhibition of designer Pierre Cardin's fashions that's on view through the end of the year), to the largest of them all, the Breakers. Cornelius Vanderbilt's 70-room palazzo is a study in grandeur, but you can see a grittier side with the new Beneath the Breakers Tour, which takes visitors to the boiler room and basement for a behind-the-scenes look at the technologies that transformed daily life in the late 19th century. And if you do have wheels, it's worth the trip along Ocean Drive past rolling lawns and hydrangea bushes the size of Buicks to reach another retreat that's been around since the Gilded Age, the Castle Hill Inn, built in 1875 as the summer home of Harvard zoologist Alexander Agassiz. A cocktail on the Lawn, the inn's al fresco destination open through Columbus Day, is practically obligatory, and if there's a chill, the staff will be happy to bring a blanket to your Adirondack chair.

Back at Gurney's, you can recharge from your adventuring at the Seawater Spa and Salon, which lives up to its name with floor-to-ceiling views of the water and treatments like the Sand and Sea Body Wrap, featuring an exfoliating scrub with jojoba beads, apricot kernels and actual sand before a Vichy shower and liberal application of cocoa butter. As for your accommodations, the 257 guest rooms and suites, equipped with Nespresso machines and a thoughtful selection of mystery novels, are comfortable if not as cosseting as Newport's most luxury-oriented properties—and the walls aren't thick enough to ward off the woo-hooing should you find yourself next door to a bachelorette party. (Congrats on your upcoming nuptials, Ashley.) But then, you didn't come here to sit in your room. You're a frolicking goat, a jolly pirate, a sailor on shore leave. Join the party. ◆

PAMMY'S HIDES SURPRISING SOPHISTICATION WITHIN A WINSOME EXTERIOR.

IT'S NOT EASY TO STAFF A RESTAURANT IN Greater Boston in 2017, with national behemoths like Eataly constantly poaching talent from both front and back of the house. Imagine competing with that when trying to build a small new indie. So we took notice when Pammy's, a new Italian-leaning spot co-owned by chef Chris Willis and his wife Pam, opened recently between Harvard and Central Squares with a cast of respected veterans like general manager Andrew Foster (ex-Fairsted Kitchen). The restaurant quickly shows what that kind of team can mean to a new place.

Complimentary bread by pastry chef Mareena McKenzie (ex-Shepard) done in the style of Puglia—rustic, hard-crusted, tenderly spongey within—sets an emblematic opening note: It's terrific and includes semolina flour milled in-house. Grilled and garlic-rubbed, that bread crowns a parti-colored bowl of heirloom tomatoes ($9), needing nothing but their lush, peak-of-summer sweetness to impress. It's there again under veal bruschetta ($16), which hides wonders under a blanket of stracchino: "umami tomatoes" with extraordinary depth from roasting and remarinating and a delectable, fork-tender mess of long-braised veal breast. Braised octopus ($17) with cubes of crispy polenta and the vivid interplay of red-pepper pesto and cucumber yogurt gets brilliant texture from long braising followed by flash-frying. Foie torchon ($18) offers a lovely bit of classic, creamy French charcuterie punched up with quartered Mission figs, a pistachio crust and a drizzle of sweet/tart saba.

With experience at Rialto, Willis has a real flair for pasta handmade from house-milled flour, as in his fusilli lunghi ($26), squiggly strands nesting a half-dozen littleneck-sized cockles with lightly blackened shishito peppers and a superb broth flavored with mussels (removed before serving) and lots of minced clams. The half-portion of fettucce alfredo ($13) is a marvel of Roman simplicity: little more than good Parmigiano, cream and a bit of starchy pasta water, here enlivened with crushed pink peppercorns and a few basil leaves, though oversaucing spoils the dish on one visit. No such misstep mars the lumache ($23), striated shells in a smashing Bolognese sauce cunningly dosed with Korean gochuchang to add subtle chili fire, sweetness and umami funk: original and amazing.

Thoughtful details likewise elevate traditional-sized entrees, like Arctic char ($27), a skillfully cooked, naked fillet underpinned with nutty farro with the chewy/sweet tang of dehydrated strawberries, though the fish needs more salt. From the price, one immediately knows that Wagyu bavette ($34) is a hybrid product lacking the fine marbling of Japanese luxury beef, but it's a quality cut of flap steak with solid accompaniments: fat slices of roasted cipollini, a snappy salsa verde, wheat berries dotted with golden raisins. It's done perfectly to temperature on one visit, off by 10 degrees on another. Boneless pan-roasted half chicken ($29) novelly presents a big, flat disk of crisply browned skin-on breast meat encapsulating an inner layer of thigh, complemented with bitter endive, sweet castelvetrano olives and a great pan sauce. Red snapper ($28) also wows with juicy, crisp-skinned fillets in a fabulously complex, chili-hot sauce, given mild balance by cauliflower and acid from lime.

McKenzie's desserts (all $11) are pretty and clever, as in her lovely crostata, a pastry pyramid enfolding peach chunks and great little wild blueberries alongside buttermilk ice cream, and a swoony, loose-textured, honey-drizzled yogurt panna cotta with plump blackberries, clusters of graham cracker crumbs and spheres of bee pollen. Bar manager Moe Isaza (ex-Tiger Mama) produces witty specialty cocktails like the In Other Words ($13), a mix of gin, yellow chartreuse and lime with the unexpected accent of briny black olives, and the Dipinto di Blu ($14) of gin, Campari, crème de cassis, lime, egg white and cream dusted with an artful swirl of black currant powder, like the hybrid of a Ramos Fizz and a Pink Lady. There's a tight list of crafty, mostly American small-producer beers ($5-$12), with a macro-lager nod to non-beer nerds, and a goodly selection of Italian amari ($8-$12). Wine director Lauren Hayes (ex-Ten Tables) curates a terrific list of nicely priced American and Italian wines, with solid Tuscan standbys like the 2014 Montenidoli Vernaccia di San Gimignano ($44) and complex orange stunners like the 2015 Cantina Ribelà Saittole ($80), though we encountered temperature problems with more than one bottle.

Among Pammy's more insistent graces is its lovely decor, providing a flattering glow from soft overhead lighting and a wood fireplace. Despite hard surfaces (exposed rafters, ceramic tile, an enormous gilt-framed mirror, white-painted and antique brick), there's enough sound absorption from leather banquettes and abundant plants and flowers to keep noise levels comfortable. The communal table at the room's center is double-width, echoing privacy-enhancing spacing throughout. Service ranges from informally relaxed and attentive to somewhat nervously over-attentive. To be fair, we began our research four weeks in, about half the buffer we usually afford to new places. A few kitchen and service flubs aren't enough to undercut the ubiquitous Mrs. Willis' warm hospitality, great drinks, a lovely room and high-technique food masquerading as simple food. Call it the charm of the paddling duck: strenuous effort below the surface, a smooth, gliding effect above. The Willises clearly want Pammy's to feel like a modestly elevated, unpretentious neighborhood joint, but the polish and urbanity behind the facade are impossible to miss. ◆

ON HOLIDAY

→ Christmas in the City brings holiday cheer to thousands of needy children and their families each December, but the magic really began on July 27 at the charity's Christmas in July event. More than 100 guests gathered at the Seaport Boston Hotel for raffles, a live auction and appearances by Santa and event founder Jake Kennedy, who dressed as an elf. The evening raised more than $10,000 as well as 50 toys that'll turn up under the tree later this year.

→ On July 20, the Esplanade Association held its seventh annual Summer Dock Party at Community Boating. Hosted by the nonprofit's young professional group, the Esplanade Friends Council, the sunset barbecue drew more than 200 guests who helped raise more than $25,000 for park improvement projects.

Q: I READ YOUR COLUMNS ALL THE TIME, AND HAVE ALWAYS WANTED TO ASK YOU: WHAT IS YOUR BEST PIECE OF BEAUTY ADVICE?

A: Thank you for asking! That's a challenging question because everybody has different needs. However, I think a universal piece of advice is to focus on the health and appearance of your skin.

Regardless of our age, whether we are in our twenties or sixties, our skin is our most important feature. Skin is the largest organ in our body. It needs to be nourished, protected, and cared for properly. When your skin is healthy and glowing, you are naturally beautiful (or handsome!).

Everybody can have healthy, glowing skin with regular visits to a qualified skin care specialist; quality, professional strength skin care products; and regular use of sunscreen.

HILLBILLY HEIST

STEVEN SODERBERGH RETURNS WITH A COAL COUNTRY COUSIN TO OCEAN'S ELEVEN.

STEVEN SODERBERGH MAKES IT LOOK easy. Here's a director who "retired" from filmmaking four years ago after releasing the prescription drug thriller Side Effects, only to turn his attention to prestige television, where he directed the Emmy-winning Liberace biopic Behind the Candelabra for HBO and all 20 episodes of the early-20th-century hospital drama The Knick. Now the Oscar winner returns to the big screen to show everyone else how it's done.

If you're one of the few who remember last year's Masterminds, Jared Hess' muddled comedy about an armored car heist carried out by bumbling rednecks, you might think you know what you're in for with Soderbergh's Logan Lucky, since it focuses on economically challenged West Virginians who attempt to reverse a supposed "family curse," changing their luck with a plan to rob North Carolina's Charlotte Motor Speedway during the Coca-Cola 600, the circuit's most popular NASCAR event of the year. You'd be wrong.

While the film may share some obvious parallels with Soderbergh's Ocean's Eleven (2001) and its sequels, Ocean's Twelve (2004) and Ocean's Thirteen (2007), its DNA more closely resembles 2012's Magic Mike, the director's fictionalized look at actor Channing Tatum's early days making ends meet as a male stripper after a knee injury scotched his football scholarship at a Florida school. First-time screenwriter Rebecca Blunt shares Soderbergh's interest in exploring how a post-recession world has driven good people to do things they may not have otherwise considered in order to get by, and she actually wrote the role of former coal miner Jimmy Logan with Alabama native Tatum in mind. But rather than turn Jimmy into an entertainer, Blunt keeps her blue-collar underdog at home in the South. Laid off due to a pre-existing condition (yes, it's still a bum knee), the divorced dad enlists the aid of his brother and sister—one-armed Clyde (Adam Driver), a bartender who lost his limb on the way back from a tour of duty in Iraq, and Mellie (Riley Keough), a car-obsessed hairdresser—to help carry out his scheme.

Clever little touches... are peppered throughout Blunt's canny script, which respects the characters.

Unlike Danny Ocean's crew, Jimmy and his siblings don't begin as criminals; they're not only forced to learn as they go, but they also have to seek outside help from a demolition expert, appropriately named Joe Bang. There's just one problem: Joe is currently incarcerated. He's also played by a platinum-haired, heavily tattooed Daniel Craig, who's obviously reveling in his chance to try on a Southern drawl—and doing it exceptionally well.

LOGAN LUCKY ★★★½
Starring Channing Tatum, Adam Driver, Riley Keough, Seth MacFarlane, Farrah Mackenzie, Katie Holmes, David Denman, Katherine Waterston, Dwight Yoakam, Sebastian Stan, Brian Gleeson, Jack Quaid, Macon Blair, Hilary Swank and Daniel Craig. Written by Rebecca Blunt. Directed by Steven Soderbergh. At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

The explosive lunacy he brings to the film is worth the price of admission, and the role serves as a reminder of how strong a character actor Craig was before he became synonymous with James Bond.

In fact, Soderbergh has rounded out his cast with a number of terrific performers, all of whom contribute nicely comic turns, from Brian Gleeson (actor Brendan's son) and Jack Quaid (Meg Ryan and Dennis Quaid's boy) as Joe's would-be hacker brothers, Sam and Fish, to Family Guy creator Seth MacFarlane as the wonderfully named Max Chilblain, an obnoxious car team sponsor with a British accent as phony as his mustache. Likewise, Dwight Yoakam adds some dim-witted charm as the warden who's so wrapped up in containing a riot—one that hilariously hinges on George R. R. Martin's inability to complete his series of fantasy novels—that he fails to notice that Joe's been sprung from and returned to prison during the commotion.

Clever little touches like that are peppered throughout Blunt's canny script, which respects the characters rather than mock them. She gives us just enough information to follow what's happening, playing coy enough to drop some welcome surprises in the home stretch. Of course, Soderbergh and his collaborators also deserve much of the credit in making sure Blunt's ideas translate well from the page to the screen, and the physically dissimilar Tatum and Driver provide a strong anchor as the credulity-stretching brothers who might be a bit smarter than they first appear. Meanwhile, DJ and talented composer David Holmes (who's been providing music for many of Soderbergh's films since 1998's Out of Sight) offers another poppy, propulsive score to complement the sharp cinematography by Peter Andrews and the clean editing of Mary Ann Bernard. It's worth noting that Andrews and Bernard are pseudonyms for the multitalented Soderbergh, drawn from his father's and mother's names. And the alias games have seemingly now extended to "Rebecca Blunt." Unconfirmed reports indicate that this freshman dramatist is none other than Soderbergh's wife of 14 years, Jules Asner, the former model and entertainment reporter who published her first novel, Whacked, back in 2008.

Here's hoping this won't be Soderbergh's last effort with "Blunt" behind the keyboard. In teaming up, they've created a fun, breezy comedy, and there's no disguising that the film is a welcome return for the director. ◆ play the Sinclair on Sept. 5.

Music / Paul Robicheau

PALACE PLANET

A HIP-HOP INNOVATOR REINVENTS HIMSELF IN AN IMPRESSIONISTIC NEW WORLD.

The music of Shabazz Palaces often sounds submerged or subliminal, like a radio broadcast fading in and out of reception—and that's how Ishmael Butler, the rapper and musical alchemist behind the experimental hip-hop duo, likes it.

"It must remind me of the way that information comes into your life," Butler, 48, says from his Seattle home. "You go through a tunnel of sounds and images and understandings and notions and clarities. It blurs. It's just how you process the world around you. Things are going on in your peripheral that you understand as having mass, but you might not recognize what the shape and sound of it is. As you turn to it, you do, but then the thing that you left becomes a little hazy."

Butler clearly has a lot of perceptions spinning around his head, sometimes more than can fit in a single album. Last month, Shabazz Palaces dropped two at once: Quazarz vs. The Jealous Machines and Quazarz: Born on a Gangster Star. They both present a character from a faraway place coming to grips with a strange new world, one that echoes our own unsettled environment.

"It's coming from emotions before anything political," says Butler, who waxes poetic about gun-toting killers in what he calls "Amurderca" and the "glowing phantom limb" of cellphones. "I'm not that politically savvy or knowledgeable. I go for the way things feel and look, and I try not to be judgmental without having some kind of facts, but I do feel confident in my intuition."

It's part of his attraction to "pulp-thriller expression in sci-fi," in film and visual art. "I like sensationalism, violence, conspiracy—forecasting of certain things that we deal with now and will affect us in the future," Butler says. When he forgets his cellphone, he explains, "I start to feel around on my person for it, but there's this ghost notion that I don't have it, as if it's a part of me... We totally interface with these things, and it's daunting to think about how fast, and why we did it, how this machine has this emotional connection with us."

"I try not to be judgmental without having some kind of facts, but I do feel confident in my intuition."

Musically, with percussion partner Tendai Maraire, Butler explores impressionistic sounds with samplers, sequencers and drum machines, reflecting such Afro-futuristic influences as Parliament-Funkadelic, Prince and Sun Ra. Butler made Jealous Machines with LA producer Sunny Levine, laying a thread that bled into sessions with hometown producer Erik Blood that became another full-length album in Gangster Star. That second album suggests a wider prism, from the strings-iced soul of "Shine a Light" to the bubbling lurch of "Since C.A.Y.A.," a nod to Seattle's Central Area Youth Association that features bassist Stephen "Thundercat" Bruner, who jumped on a Butler rhythm track during a jam at LA producer Flying Lotus' house. "It's like being at a wizard's house," Butler says. "Wizards come by, all day long, and hang out."

Butler grew up in a household with jazz-loving parents, encouraged by his father to play alto sax in his junior high jazz band. Then he discovered hip-hop through Run-D.M.C. and Rakim. "That's when I said, 'This is something I want to do.'"

And he did, launching the jazz-inflected Digable Planets, which won a Grammy for its 1993 hit "Rebirth of Slick (Cool Like Dat)." But the group's success was short-lived, and Butler eventually dropped out of the game. He was working in his home studio when Zimbabwean-American musician Maraire stepped in. "I was making music, but I never thought that I'd release it," Butler says. "Tendai heard it and said, 'You should put it out.'"

Butler overcame his doubts. "It was a bad look for a guy of my age to still be rapping. And to a certain extent, I still do kind of think that, which I know is a fucked-up thing to say, but it's a young man's game," Butler says after several years of recording for Sub Pop and international touring (which extends to a Sept. 5 stop at the Sinclair as well as dates with a reunited Digable). "I'm always striving for more, but I'm also 'This is cool to have made it this far, at this age.'" ◆

THE PIZZA CHASE

AN EPIC SEARCH FOR A SLICE INCLUDES EATING SOME HUMBLE PIE.

A FEW YEARS AGO I WROTE ABOUT HOW I was pro-gentrification in Southie, and boy did I hear about it from the townies. I thought that my position—nice things are nicer than crappy things—was unassailable, but I see now that I was wrong. Because it is now impossible to get a cheap slice of pizza in this city after 9:30 pm on a weekday.

Yeah, sure, your neighborhood has a pizza place that's open till 2 am and the slices cost 50 cents and the sanitation rating is 120 percent. Well, I wasn't there, OK? I was wandering between the Seaport and the North End like a hungry zombie, except looking for pizza instead of brains. Although if I found some brain pizza, I'd probably get it and then just pick the brains off it and hope they didn't make the rest of it taste too brain-y.

So here's the situation: I disembark from the Lexington paddlewheel boat at 9 pm hungry for a snack, as one is after a paddlewheel cruise. I'm staying at the Harborside Inn near Faneuil Hall, so I start walking in that direction. I hustle through the Seaport District because all of that was built in the past two weeks, and I'm looking for the kind of place that opened around 1976 and has burned down twice since then.

I head for Faneuil Hall but get sidetracked in the Financial District due to the helicopter attack. OK, maybe it's not a helicopter attack. But something really strange is going on. A fleet of blacked-out helicopters is flying a pattern from the harbor to the top of a building near the Custom House. Everyone on the sidewalk is staring upward, which is hardly ever a good sign, when you think about it. Every 30 seconds or so, a chopper will blaze in, pause just above the roof of the building, then turn and head back out over the harbor at 150 mph, or however fast helicopters go. Who lives in that building? Are they practicing an emergency rescue? Why would they be doing that? Could there be a pizza place on the ground level of that building? So many questions.

Since this is Boston, even a nighttime black-ops helicopter raid is met with salty so-over-it annoyance. "Every three months they do this," says a guy standing near Broad Street, gesturing toward the sky with his lit cigarette. I ask if there's some VIP in the building near the Custom House. "No, it's not about the building," he says wearily. "It's the harbor! They're practicing protecting the harbor." I don't know how this guy knows this or why I believe him, but his blasé attitude is infectious. Suddenly, I don't care about the helicopters, either. What I want is pizza, and luckily there's a place right next to the hotel.

And... it's locked up for the night, closed 20 minutes early. "Stupid helicopters made me late for pizza," I mutter, hopefully out of earshot of any fellow pedestrians.

Now, the Harborside Lounge, right there at the hotel, also has pizza. But I want a single slice, served on a paper plate, and I'll mop the grease off with napkins and then give it three shakes of crushed red pepper. The pizza here is probably not like that. They probably use fresh mushrooms. And I'm not in a fresh-mushrooms kind of mood. I want the kind of pizza that you wouldn't mind throwing at someone outside a Bruins game.

And that's hard to find. The Faneuil Hall Marketplace is closed for the night. The Hong Kong beckons, and I consider going for some teriyaki sticks, but I think you're required to down those with a scorpion bowl. And the last time I got into those, one of my friends went swimming in the harbor. Which wouldn't have been an awful idea if it wasn't January. So I keep walking.

I want the kind of pizza that you wouldn't mind throwing at someone outside a Bruins game.

And walking. If I wanted a $16 cocktail, I'd have no shortage of options. But I'm striking out on down-and-dirty slices. So I cross into the North End, where the tomato sauce flows like wine and the streets are paved with pepperoni. And you know what I see? A guy walking out of a store with a pet duck. I mean, I'm assuming it's a pet. I'm pretty sure there wouldn't be an unaffiliated duck strolling Hanover Street. Normally I'd stop to find out what's going on with this duck, but I'm on a mission. A mission that finally ends at the Cobblestone Cafe, where I buy the last two slices of pizza. Which are of much better quality than I was looking for, but any port in a storm.

Perhaps there's a lesson here about gentrification and the downsides of upscale developments, about the relentless squeeze of rents and the attendant block-by-block economic homogenization. Or maybe the lesson is that if you're hungry outside the Hong Kong at 10 pm, stop walking. And start making friends. I don't think you're allowed to order a scorpion bowl by yourself. ◆

IN THE DOGHOUSE

SOUND ADVICE ON TABLE SCRAPS, DINNER INVITATIONS AND THE JOY OF MUSICALS.

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

My wife tells me to mind my own business, but this is something that's been bothering me and I wonder if I can get an impartial opinion. We were visiting friends over the Fourth of July, and all through dinner our hosts kept feeding their dog scraps from the table. Now, I know that's not good for the animal, but I didn't say a thing. I have seen this happen before; they just don't know any better. But this most recent visit really bothered me. After dinner they started feeding the dog chocolates and said how much he loved them. Of course he loves chocolates. Dogs love everything; they are dogs. Chocolate can be lethal to canines. Should I have said something or is my wife right that I'm just looking for trouble? I'd never say that your friends are clueless. But many people buy pets without doing any research about how to care for them. I know. My wife and I had several dogs when our kids were young. Personally, I had enough problems with people and didn't pay too much attention. Our first dog, a gorgeous Samoyed, used to re-create the Battle of the Marne every week in our yard, digging giant trenches. Our second dog used to visit next-door neighbors daily in the summers and pee through their sliding screens into their living room. Luckily, they loved all of God's creatures.

You should speak up to your friends. Chocolate can indeed be toxic to canines—the darker the chocolate, the worse the toxicity. Please tell your friends about this. Don't be shy. Tell them that they have to educate themselves about their friend. As in many things, love isn't enough.

As an aside, grapes are much worse than chocolate for canines.

I'm a lesbian and I live with my girlfriend. When I was 15, I knew I was gay, so it's been part of my life since then. For the past several months I've gotten friendly with a man in my office. He's incredibly kind and smart. I admit I'm attracted to him. Am I crazy? I'm living with someone. The man has asked me to dinner, and I'm tempted to go. Am I cheating? Well, attraction has infinite definitions. If we're honest, I think there's a certain duality in everyone. My view is that you're not married, and dinner with a colleague can be both fun and innocent. Your dinner will be just one more life adventure that teaches you about yourself. I believe that there are infinite definitions of love. And then one mixes in lust, curiosity, the thrill of the chase, and on and on. Of course, the real problem may come with a second dinner, and perhaps much more than that, which may produce another question from you. And I'll be happy to answer if that happens.

I've just seen Hamilton, and it was the first time I've ever seen a live musical performance. Then I bought the soundtrack, which I just adore. What really grabbed me were the lyrics, which told stories and painted pictures. Can you recommend shows to see and soundtracks to listen to so I can expand my new discovery in music? Good for you. You're about to enter a world that will stimulate and uplift you for many years. Musicals can carry you away like few other mediums and have you leaving theaters humming tunes that can resonate with you forever. I can think of several dozen shows that take me back to moments in childhood, adolescence and more recent times (as with Hamilton). I relate songs to romances I've been in, insert lyrics into my consciousness and sometimes actually sing them out loud, as in the case of "Being Alive," a Stephen Sondheim song from Company.

Boston's theater scene these days is more vibrant than ever, and that extends to musicals, mostly in smaller houses, many that are intimate and wonderfully done. The Improper has biweekly listings you can reliably check, right here. The Emerson College station WERS (88.9 FM) has the only local program featuring show tunes, which airs on Saturdays and Sundays. As for sampling classic shows, starting with the '50s and '60s, dip into Oklahoma!, South Pacific, My Fair Lady and Cabaret. Later, there's Cats, Les Miserables, Avenue Q and Sweeney Todd. And if you loved Hamilton, try Lin-Manuel Miranda's first effort, In the Heights.

Happy humming and singing along in the car and the shower. You're in for a treat. ◆

Don't be shy. Tell them that they have to educate themselves about their friend. As in many things, love isn't enough.

Soroff On / Betty Gilpin

GLOWING TERMS

THE ACTRESS WRESTLES WITH BAD JOBS, PIERCED EARS AND HER FEAR OF THE U.S. POSTAL SERVICE.

ACTRESS BETTY GILPIN, 31, WAS BORN IN NEW YORK and raised in Roxbury, Connecticut. She graduated from Fordham College and has appeared extensively in theater and on television, notably as Carrie Roman on Nurse Jackie, Audrey on the Starz series American Gods and Debbie "Liberty Belle" Eagan on the Netflix series GLOW. She divides her time between Brooklyn and a home in the Berkshires.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Can you pinpoint the time you knew you'd be an actor?
BETTY GILPIN: God, it was when I was a little, little kid. I went to see Crazy for You on Broadway. I think I was 7 years old or something, sitting in the center row, and I stood on my chair and danced and screamed and grabbed my hair like it was Beatlemania. During the curtain call, I got a bow. The whole cast extended their hands to me like I was the conductor, and everyone cheered for me, because I was acting like this banshee crazy person.

What playwright from history could have seduced you? Going to theater school, it's like dating the guy who has the most in common with you, so the one you can gossip with, and you both love hair... So I would say Tennessee Williams is the one I'd try to date, and he'd be like, "No, no, honey. I don't go there."

Theater, TV or film? Well, TV is so different now. When I first started auditioning for TV, the female roles were either wear a badge and give a blowjob or hold a laundry basket and give a blowjob. Now, the blowjobs don't come till like season four! You get to solve three cases before you give a blowjob! So I think it's really exciting what's happening. So many more playwrights are writing for TV now, and there are so many more outlets producing content.

Which is more you: designer or vintage clothing? Vintage clothing, because I have what I lovingly refer to as a bovine mutant body. Modern clothes designed for tiny little bustless people are not for me. They look like a $3,000 mainsail wrapped around a whale. When you have boobs the size of Shaquille O'Neal's yarmulkes, you can't really work a sack dress. Vintage clothes were designed at a time when women had curves, so I wear NASA-engineered vintage clothing.

Any tattoos or piercings? No. I have none. I don't even have my ears pierced. I am very much a tomboy at heart. Because I've played so many sort of Alpha Barbie characters, I've had to dye my hair and get spray tans a lot and nails and all that, and I feel like my ears are my final frontier where I'm still secretly myself. I feel like if I pierce my ears, then the terrorists win, and so I'm holding out for as long as I can.

Song you sing most often in the shower? I do a pretty damn good Cranberries impression. Especially when it sounds like she's yodeling and falling down the stairs at the same time. So when they come on when I'm in the car, I can really let it rip. But I live in Brooklyn, so singing in the shower means it echocs throughout five neighbors' showers, and I can't be as brave as when I'm in the car.

Favorite shade of green? The colors of the entire Berkshires. It's like green porn. It's so overwhelming, especially when you're coming from New York. You drive up to Massachusetts and you feel like your eyes are going to explode from all the green, and you wonder why the hell you live in New York City.

If you weren't an actor, what would you be doing? Oh, I have no damn idea. I truly don't have any other skills. As a waitress, I was a disaster. My waitressing days unfortunately coincided with my stoner days, so I was really bad. I literally once had a customer ask me for chopsticks, and I brought them ChapStick. I once went up to a table and said, "Hi, can I get you started with some appetizers?" And they were like, "You've been waiting on us all night long. We're just waiting for our check."

If you were a wine varietal, what would it be? My husband is really into wine, and maybe it's because of my years of marijuana and cigarettes, but I cannot taste anything. We went to a wine tasting, and I assumed we were supposed to just eat the plate of cheese they put in front of us, instead of pairing them with the wines. Then I just drank everything, with no real discernment. So you could hand me food coloring and milk, and I'd be like, "Oh! Oaky!"

How much did you learn about wrestling before doing GLOW? Really nothing. I thought everyone was going to have to lose 10 pounds, or something, but all we really had to do was learn the moves. It was really kind of "Come as you are and let's throw everybody's cellulite around." It was really a very body-positive kind of experience.

Have you ever been badly cheated on, like your character on GLOW? I never have, crazily enough. Although I'm sure if any of the Guido firemen of yore, or my gay boyfriends from regional theaters past, are reading this, they'd say, "She was blind!" But I never knew about it.

American Gods*—sexiest show on TV? It's pretty sexy. It's so hot, and I know they reshot the gay sex scene because it wasn't gay enough. They had to turn it up. I'm so excited about it. When I first went in to shoot it, I didn't know what we were doing. I came in and did a few scenes, and I was like, "Hope you guys are having fun on your project!" Then I watched it, and I was like, "This is the scariest, sexiest, most terrifying thing on TV!" It's insanely cool.

Of all the roles you've playcd, which one made you feel likc you weren't really acting? I don't think I've ever felt like I was playing myself because I don't feel like who I am on the inside is reflected by who I am on the outside. You never see an apologize-y curvy girl. The big, busty girls are never allowed to be "I'll be over here in the corner, wearing a whimsical hat." We're always in the center, wearing a lace diaper. We never get the ukulele.

Role you felt was furthest from who you are? Maybe Carrie Roman on Nurse Jackie. I mean, let's not forget Chopsticks-gate from my waitressing days. I certainly have my moments of being inept, but she's just such a sleepy drag queen, and my neuroses keep my eyes open a little more than hers.

Best feature? I'm the kind of friend who might forget we have brunch plans. I might forget a gift at the baby shower. I'm not good at helping with table settings. But if you killed someone, I'd be there. Let's sit up at the kitchen table and talk about the tragedies in our lives. I'm the best apocalyptic friend on the planet.

What would you say is your biggest shortcoming? I would say I have a pathological fear of mail, and the more important the mail, the further back it goes in the wicker basket. If it's from the IRS, you go under the journals from middle school, and you will marinate there for maybe two years. Then I'll eventually open the flap, scream at the sight of a folded paper, and then it's back in the wicker basket for another six months, until I hear my husband saying, "Honey, if you don't respond to this, you're going to jail." And then, I'll launch into "Some Enchanted Evening." ◆

"When you have boobs the size of Shaquille O'Neal's yarmulkes, you can't really work a sack dress."

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

DEAD SET Dead men may tell no tales, but their former lovers do. Such is the premise of Israel Horovitz's Out of the Mouths of Babes, which comes to the Gloucester Stage Company after a sold-out run in New York. The comedy unfolds in the Paris apartment of a recently deceased centenarian lothario, who has loved, and left, many women during the course of his colorful life. Four former flames (more than one scorned) have gathered at his home to mourn—and to fight, laugh and cry. Our 2014 Boston's Best actress, Obehi Janice, stars as his youngest paramour alongside GSC veteran Paula Plum in the play's New England premiere, which runs through Sept. 2. / Alexandra Cavallo PHOTO: GARY NG

PARDON MY FRENCH Enter the candy-colored dreamland of Sixties French cinema with director Jacques Demy's musical film The Young Girls of Rochefort. Charming twins Delphine and Solange (Catherine Deneuve and Françoise Dorléac) long to leave the tiny seaside town of Rochefort to pursue fame and romance. The girls get the perfect escape opportunity when two handsome strangers come to town, bringing with them a carnival in need of two singers. See the 1967 film for free on Aug. 29 as part of the Elements of Cinema series at the Brattle Theatre, where MIT associate professor of French studies Catherine Clark will be on hand for a post-screening discussion. / Cathryn Haight

Reviews by Brett Michel

Atomic Blonde ★★1/2 After toiling in the shadows for the last decade as a second unit director on a lot of action movies you've likely seen (Jurassic World and Captain America: Civil War among them), David Leitch co-directed John Wick, but even that went uncredited. But with this stylish Charlize Theron vehicle, he finally graduates to the big leagues, earning his first full director's credit. And as long as Theron's British agent, Lorraine Broughton, is kicking ass, she's in good hands with Leitch, who clearly enjoys putting her through some acrobatic paces, even when she's in stilettos. (I guess we know at least one of the sequences Leitch was responsible for in Jurassic World!) The film bogs down, however, when it sticks to the ridiculously convoluted script by Kurt Johnstad, which is based on The Coldest City, a graphic novel written by Antony Johnston and illustrated by Sam Hart. That city is Berlin in the week before the fall of the wall, a setting populated by double- and triple-crossers, including her contact, David Percival (James McAvoy). Leitch has fun working with the signifiers of 1989, from his music choices to the neon-infused, Patrick Nagel-like compositions he and cinematographer Jonathan Sela create as backdrops for Broughton and sultry French agent Delphine Lasalle (Sofia Boutella). And if the fireworks between these two beauties aren't enough for you, there's always the gunplay with just about everyone else. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Brigsby Bear ★★1/2 There's a darker movie lurking under the surface of Dave McCary's big-screen directing debut. With TV credits that include episodes of Saturday Night Live, it's no surprise that his first feature is populated by SNL veterans, nor that he bends over backward to make this weird little film likable. That he succeeds is no small feat, either. It doesn't hurt that his lead actor is SNL's Kyle Mooney, who co-wrote this curio's script with Kevin Costello. Mooney plays James, a 30-ish man-child who's spent his life in an underground shelter with his hippie parents, Ted and April (Mark Hamill and Jane Adams), since an apocalyptic event has made the outside air unbreathable. But at least James can look forward to new episodes of Brigsby Bear Adventures, delivered to their bunker weekly on VHS cassettes. This cheapie sci-fi serial would look low-budget on PBS, but the educational tales of a talking, time-traveling bear offer the closest thing to a friend James has ever known. OK, so alert viewers may find a number of oddities here. Chief among them: How does post-apocalyptic life include a Netflix-like delivery service? The truth has a lot in common with the premise of 2015's Room, since James' "parents" actually abducted him from a hospital when he was a child. Shortly after we witness this setup, James is reunited with his real parents (Matt Walsh and Michaela Watkins), but life without new Brigsby adventures proves challenging at best. It's a premise that McCary could have mined for more pathos, but it's sweet enough as is, if you have a taste for saccharine. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Detroit ★★★1/2 One of the finest films in theaters right now is a historical drama based on events not widely known to the American public, one set in a burning war zone where the young men whose lives hang in the balance have little hope for escape. No, I'm not talking about Christopher Nolan's Dunkirk, but Kathryn Bigelow's Detroit, which finds the Oscar-winning director of 2009's The Hurt Locker once again collaborating with journalist Mark Boal, the Academy Award-winning screenwriter behind both that film and Bigelow's 2013 triumph, Zero Dark Thirty. Their latest work centers on a horrifying incident of police brutality that transpired on a hot summer evening in 1967 during a week of civil unrest spawned from a Motor City police raid on an after-hours club. Two nights after the uprising began, a report of sniper fire sent the National Guard and police toward the Algiers Motel, which had been a refuge from the violence but would become the site of a massacre. After riddling the building with bullets, law enforcement rounded up the terrified—and innocent—suspects who were holed up inside, doling out frontier justice to a group of young black men and the two young white women who had the audacity to be enjoying the night with them. In February, Jordan Peele's Get Out offered an explosive critique of racism, but his scares were tempered with laughs; Bigelow offers no such release. Sadly, the type of horrors she's unflinchingly put on display here are as familiar today as they were 50 years ago. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Dunkirk ★★★ Pity poor Tom Hardy. After appearing as Bane in Christopher Nolan's The Dark Knight Rises, and now as an air-mask-wearing RAF fighter pilot in the writer/director's latest, a fictionalized recreation of 1940's Dunkirk evacuation, it's easy to joke that the British-born actor is destined to have his mouth muzzled nearly every time he appears in one of Nolan's large-scale epics. And large-scale, Dunkirk most certainly is. As such, be sure to see it on film at one of the three local venues projecting it in the 70mm format: the AMC Loews Boston Common, the Coolidge Corner Theatre and the Somerville Theatre in Davis Square. Or, if you're willing to go the extra mile to experience the movie in its best possible format—70mm IMAX—your nearest option is in Providence. Now, if you're asking yourself why I'm focusing so much on the visual presentation of the film, simply put, the visuals are this picture's raison d'être. In fact, Nolan shows very little interest in developing backstories for his characters—you'll be hard-pressed to remember many of their names. So here's a cheat sheet: Mark Rylance plays Mr. Dawson, the civilian captain of a small pleasure yacht who's determined to help get the shellshocked British soldiers off of Dunkirk's beach, where they're sitting ducks for German air attack. Combatting this threat from above is Farrier (Hardy), while newcomer Fionn Whitehead plays Tommy, the grunt we follow for most of the film's fractured chronology, which practically begs a second viewing to piece it all together. Choose your theater wisely. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Good Time ★★★★ Returning with their third triumph after 2009's Daddy Longlegs and 2014's Heaven Knows What, Boston University graduates Josh and Benny Safdie have created what's easily their most accessible film yet, a grungy little movie that manages to locate all of the grit and grime that used to be on display so gloriously in the New York-set cinema of the 1970s. Gorgeously shot on 35mm film by cinematographer Sean Price Williams, this uproariously funny crime drama also explicitly owes a debt to its forebear from a later decade, After Hours, Martin Scorsese's 1985 comic classic that, like this film, spans a single, fast-paced night on the mean streets of Manhattan. After involving his developmentally and hearing-disabled brother Nick (co-director Benny Safdie) in a botched bank robbery, Connie Nikas (a wonderful Robert Pattinson) embarks on a crazed overnight odyssey to spring Nick from jail. Along the way, he picks up a few unwitting accomplices, including sometime girlfriend Corey (Jennifer Jason Leigh), underaged Crystal (Taliah Lennice Webster in an incredibly assured, naturalistic debut) and recently released ex-con Ray (Heaven Knows What's Buddy Duress), all backed by a hypnotic electronic score by Wayland native Daniel Lopatin (also known as Oneohtrix Point Never). It's grubby good fun that packs an emotional wallop. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

An Inconvenient Sequel: Truth to Power ★★1/2 More than a decade after director Davis Guggenheim's glorified PowerPoint presentation (the Al Gore-led global warming documentary, An Inconvenient Truth), Bonni Cohen and Jon Shenk have broken free of the lecture hall format, getting the grayer and thicker Gore out for some needed exercise in this follow-up. Training their cameras on the "recovering politician" as he travels the globe, they capture Gore walking on crumbling glaciers, meeting with world leaders and, yes, inspiring future activists with his well-oiled presentation, which has moved past its slideshow origins. There's now ample footage of natural disasters that can be pinned on climate change, and sadly, as Gore demonstrates with his video clips, some of the predictions that critics scoffed at in Guggenheim's picture have come to pass, like the flooding of the World Trade Center memorial site. Cohen and Shenk probably spend a bit too much time creating a hagiography for Gore, pausing frequently as admirers stop to tell him how much they wish he'd been elected president. But they find their footing as they sprint toward a climax at the 2015 Paris Climate Summit, the results of which should end the movie on a high note. Alas, an unexpected storm cloud in the form of President Trump looms over the film, threatening the climate accord that so many fought for. As truths go, they don't get much more inconvenient. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Only Living Boy in New York ★1/2 Marc Webb tries hard; he really does. The director of (500) Days of Summer did a bit better in the spring with Gifted—a drama involving a young child prodigy and her well-meaning uncle—than he does here with The Only Living Boy in New York. Working from a truly awful screenplay by Allan Loeb that both takes its name from the Simon & Garfunkel song and uses it as the title of an in-movie novel a character is penning, Webb has just as much trouble navigating the plot here as he did in 2014's The Amazing Spider-Man 2, where he at least had the benefit of recognizably human performances from his leads to carry the film past its comic book contrivances. But to be fair, the self-pitying and adrift young New Yorker at the center of his latest, Thomas, would be tough for nearly any director to get a handle on. Still, Webb didn't do himself any favors by casting London-born Callum Turner in the role, or by putting glasses on him; with his curly locks, the resulting effect is that Thomas comes off as a vanilla version of James Franco, pining away for Mimi (an appealing Kiersey Clemons from 2015's Dope), the younger college girl who works at his favorite bookstore. Things begin to get complicated when Jeff Bridges enters the picture as Thomas' mysterious new neighbor, W.F., who offers sage advice when he's not busy narrating the film. A character named Johanna (Kate Beckinsale) also turns up, seemingly just so Bob Dylan's "Visions of Johanna" can play on the soundtrack of this overwrought John Cheever wannabe. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Trip to Spain ★★★ At the outset of Michael Winterbottom's The Trip to Italy, sharp-witted co-stars and comedians Steve Coogan and Rob Brydon self-consciously bantered back-and-forth about how sequels are rarely as good as the originals, a nod to the fact that this 2014 comedy about two British men talking over six meals through six different Italian locations was itself a sequel to The Trip, Winterbottom's 2010 original that found the duo dining at six locations throughout northern England. Now in their third go-round, The Trip to Spain, Coogan and Brydon discuss the diminishing returns offered by trilogies, and you laugh along with them as they share six more meals in, yes, Spain. But the simple fact is that these two old friends, playing fictionalized versions of themselves, are just as funny and interesting as they were at the start of these films, which are actually condensed versions of three separate, six-episode series made by Winterbottom for the BBC—more of a buffet than a six-course dinner, if you will. Beyond the sumptuously photographed, hunger-inducing food, a large part of the appeal of this endeavor derives from the endless string of dueling celebrity impressions that "Steve Coogan" and "Rob Brydon" engage in as they eat, from Mick Jagger to David Bowie and from Sean Connery to fan favorite Michael Caine. Like an old married couple, these two have mastered the art of the put-down (especially if an impression fails to measure up), good-naturedly ribbing each other as they face their mortality over food. Here's to the next trip! (At Kendall Square.)

Wind River ★★★ Let's get this out of the way up front: Wind River doesn't quite live up to the lofty expectations set by last year's Hell or High Water. With that film and Sicario, Taylor Sheridan has established himself as a screenwriter of uncommon talent, but now that the Sons of Anarchy actor has moved on to directing one of his own scripts, it's clear that he doesn't yet possess the chops of veteran helmers like Denis Villeneuve or David Mackenzie. Migrating north from the Southwestern milieu of his earlier thrillers into the colder climes of Wyoming, Sheridan follows Fish and Wildlife agent Cory Lambert (a quietly commanding Jeremy Renner) as he teams up with rookie FBI agent Jane Banner (Renner's Avengers teammate, Elizabeth Olsen) to investigate the rape and murder of a local girl (Kelsey Asbille from TV's One Tree Hill) on a remote Native American reservation. As you might expect, the antagonistic dialogue that fueled much of Hell or High Water makes a welcome return here, as does one of that film's co-stars, Gil Birmingham. Unfortunately, Renner is also saddled with delivering a few heavy-handed speeches that aren't up to Sheridan's usual standards. The violence that punctuates his scripts is, however, and when it hits, it hits hard—and with poetic retribution. Despite some reservations, this is still a chilling film, one punctuated by the frequent snowfall that fills the frame. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

TEEN DREAMS Let's be clear: There is nothing small about Lil Yachty. The hip-hop upstart and self-proclaimed "King of Teens" just dropped his debut album, Teenage Emotions, in May, but the 20-year-old rapper is already making big waves—and ruffling feathers. See: a recent interview-turned-meme with rap veteran Joe Budden in which he enraged the elder artist by proclaiming he was "happy every day." Known for his signature red braids and flat, almost-jerky lyrical style, the young buck has gotten under the skin of some forebears by rejecting rap conventions, but being disruptive can be an asset in the rap game. Just ask Tyler, the Creator. It hasn't hurt Yachty, if back-to-back shows (one already sold out) at the Wilbur on Aug. 26 are evidence. / Alexandra Cavallo

Edited by Sarah Hagman

READING MATERIAL There's more than meets the eye in the Addison Gallery of American Art's exhibition Invisible Citings, which showcases the work of longtime pals Elaine Reichek and Jeanne Silverthorne. The artists and avid readers drew on texts ranging from Ralph Ellison's Invisible Man to Charlotte Perkins Gilman's "The Yellow Wallpaper" and even a Rolling Stone profile of Beach Boys frontman Brian Wilson to create their individual pieces. They include Silverthorne's Rubber Cardboard Box (pictured), stuffed with blank-looking pages on which she's penned others' musings on the invisible in phosphorescent ink—with some revealed thanks to overhead ultraviolet light. Meanwhile, Reichek's embroidered passages in cursive feature hidden messages stitched in glow-in-the-dark thread. Have a look-see at Phillips Academy, where Invisible Citings is on display from Sept. 1 through December. / Sarah Hagman COURTESY OF THE ARTIST AND MARC STRAUS GALLERY, NEW YORK

OSTRA offers contemporary Mediterran- [illegible] oston's Back Bay

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hard-wood charcoal grilling year round.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Ed Robinson's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

AFTERNOON DELIGHT

When the kegger in question is at Naumkeag—the 19th-century mansion with historic grounds in Stockbridge—you know to wear your nattiest garden party attire and prepare to be wowed by the setting.

Hosted by The Trustees of Reservations (who operate the property as a museum), the elegant afternoon included live music and performances, flower-arranging demonstrations and garden-inspired light bites and libations. Front and center: honorary co-chairs Bob and Elisabeth Wilmers, co-chairs Hilary Deely and Celia Kittredge, assorted Spragues, legendary cellist Yo-Yo Ma and his wife, arts consultant Jill Hornor, former Gov. Bill Weld, Cantabrigian cool kids Amy and Jonathan Poorvu, latter-day Lucille Ball Julia Owens and her parents, Beacon Hillions Biddy and Bob Owens, redheaded beauty Lauren LeBlanc and her handsome other half, Paul, the perfectly lovely Nicic Panctta, Berkshires big shot Richard Seltzer and one woman who said, "Serving drinks and then encouraging people to walk down the Blue Steps is perhaps questionable judgment."

Another guest, upon discovering the Chinese Garden, exclaimed, "Look! There's no need to dig a hole to China."

However, the best comment came from Bob Wilmers, who said, "The Choate family paid $36,000 for this house in the 1880s, and I think Joseph Choate would be appalled to know that we spent over $4 million restoring the gardens, but the results are pretty spectacular."

'Nuff said.

BLING WITH BITE

The best way to loosen the purse strings among The Friends of the Public Garden?

Lure them up to the rooftop of the Taj and ply them with food and drink at A Summer Party, which raised money for the group's work on the Common, the Garden and the Comm. Ave. Mall.

Present and accounted for: the achingly lovely Marta Van Ranst and her adoring other half, Al, professional partygoer Ann Heimlicher, blond bombshell Ashley Breed, the hale and hearty Rob Rottenbucher, patrician beauty Paula Stookey and her handsome husband, Jeffrey, the stunning duo of Mimi Sun and Linda Fung, music man David Feltner, publishing pair David Jacobs and Gen Tracey, ice skating imp Collin Vail Sullivan, fashion avatar Leslee Shupe and her gorgeous muse, Sarah Mars, grand old man Henry Lee, and so on and so forth.

"I pipe up when I need to when it comes to protecting the piping plovers," said one guest. "But then again, I grew up in Lincoln where there were traffic jams to let the salamanders cross the road."

The evening's funniest remark, though, came from the woman who warned a friend leaning in for a kiss: "Careful. These earrings have already cut someone's jugular; I guarantee you'll need a tetanus shot."

NEXT STOP, VERONA

Twenty years ago, Commonwealth Shakespeare Company mounted a free production of Romeo and Juliet on Boston Common, and parents of a rambunctious 4-year-old who were worried he'd get bored watched him become transfixed by the swordplay, inching closer and closer to the stage. Fast-forward to this summer, when the now-24-year-old Kai Tshikosi played Tybalt in a brilliant production that had crowds transfixed and critics swooning, proving that free, world-class theater bears the sweetest of fruit.

Opening night began with a reception at the Parkman House that attracted the likes of composer/genius Tod Machover, the flawless Priscilla Douglas, brilliant choreographer Levi Marsman, uber-do-gooder Ashley Wisneski, Missoni-clad mama Sabra Katz, stunning fashion plate Emma Pickard, tall drink o' water Kurt Gress, design avatar Anja Kola and her husband, Kier "Dr. Glad" McDonough, sexy Red Sox lawyer David Friedman, whirling dervish Laura Baldini, the unsinkable Doris Yaffe and one woman who greeted another guest by saying, "You're much better-looking than your headshot."

After wine and light bites, the crowd headed to the Common for the production, which was nothing short of spectacular, but not before the following exchange took place: "We want to come visit you in Wellfleet."

"We live in Truro. Psychiatrists live in Wellfleet. Crazy people live in Truro." ◆

FIRST DOWN

IT CAN BE UNWISE TO DRAW CONCLUSIONS from a first impression. Take the Patriots. Tom Brady's first appearance for New England came in a loss on Thanksgiving in 2000, when he threw three passes in the blowout, completing only one. Bill Belichick's first game as the Patriots head coach was also a loss. Since then, the two have teamed up as the central figures for the greatest dynasty in the NFL.

But there are also first impressions that have staying power. Our cover star, Patriots linebacker Dont'a Hightower, scored a defensive touchdown in his first NFL game in 2012. He's since gone on to make even bigger plays in the Patriots' two most recent Super Bowl wins. As I detail in a profile, Hightower's content to make all of his noise on the field rather than off it. Elsewhere in this Patriots-themed issue, Ezra Dyer previews the team's high hopes for this season, Sarah Hagman dips into some G.O.A.T. doughnuts and I take a look at a TB12-approved meal kit service.

And consider one more first: This is my first time writing this column. After more than four years at The Improper, I've jumped into the editor's role with a desire to maintain the high quality you've come to expect from us. Our staff will continue to compile the best print listings in the city and we'll offer Boston's finest lifestyle coverage, marrying words and pictures in this magazine and online. I hope you find this issue is a good first impression. But remember to keep reading, as there's plenty more ahead.

PLANT POWER

A NEEDHAM-BASED MEAL KIT SERVICE FINDS A FIT WITH THE TB12 TEAM.

Squash the Competition

Andrea Nordby is neither an NFL quarterback nor a vegetarian, but the head chef of the Needham-based Purple Carrot is helping a lot of people eat like both thanks to the TB12 Performance Meals. Launched this spring, the meal kit from Purple Carrot designs its plant-based dishes after Tom Brady's nutritional guidelines, meaning they're high in protein, gluten-free and use limited soy and refined sugars. Nordby, who previously worked as the South End Buttery's culinary director, devises the meals about 10-12 weeks in advance before sending all the recipes to the TB12 team for approval.

"The TB12 Performance Meals have been wildly successful thus far," she says, citing large growth for Purple Carrot, which sells three two-serving meals for $78 a week. Currently planning the fall meals, we asked her to take a break from sorting through squashes, parsnips and pears to give us an exclusive game day recipe that Patriots fans could enjoy while staying true to Brady's guidelines. / Matt Martinelli

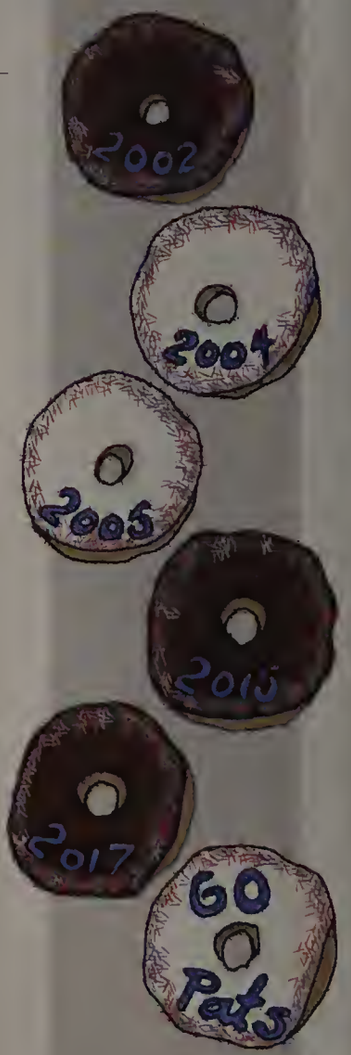
Pumpkin Curry with Sprouted Mung Beans & Brown Basmati Rice
(Serves 2)

INGREDIENTS:
3/4 cup brown basmati rice
Salt to taste
8 ounces fresh pumpkin, cubed
3/4 cup sprouted mung beans
1 small yellow onion
1 inch fresh ginger
1 garlic clove
1 tablespoon panang curry paste
5.5 ounces coconut milk
3 kaffir lime leaves
1 tablespoon coconut sugar
1/4 ounce fresh Thai basil
1 tablespoon coconut oil

DIRECTIONS:
- Preheat the oven to 425 degrees.

- Add the rice, 1 1/4 cup of water and a pinch of salt to a small saucepan and bring to a boil. Reduce heat to low, cover and cook until all the water is absorbed and rice is tender, about 30 to 35 minutes.

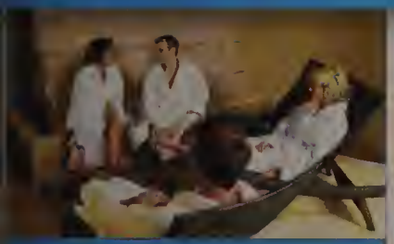
- Add the pumpkin to a baking sheet and coat with 1 teaspoon of coconut oil. Sprinkle with salt and bake until tender, about 16 to 20 minutes.



- In another small saucepan, add the sprouted mung beans and a pinch of salt. Cover with an inch of water, bring to a boil and reduce heat to a simmer. Cook the mung beans until tender, about 15 to 20 minutes, and then drain. (The mung beans will not soak up all of the water.)

- Peel and chop the onion. Peel and mince the ginger and garlic. Place 2 teaspoons of coconut oil in a medium pot over medium-high heat. Add the chopped onion and cook until softened, about 3 to 5 minutes. Add the minced ginger and garlic and cook until fragrant, about 30 seconds. Mix in the panang curry paste and cook, stirring continuously, for an additional minute. Add the coconut milk, 1/2 cup of water, kaffir lime leaves and coconut sugar. Reduce heat to low and gently simmer the curry until slightly thickened, about 5 to 8 minutes. Remove the kaffir lime leaves from the curry and season with salt. Stir in half of the cooked mung beans and all of the roasted pumpkin. Tear the Thai basil with your fingers and add to the mixture.

- Divide the brown basmati rice and remaining cooked mung beans between large bowls. Top with the pumpkin curry.



Fit for a G.O.A.T.

Not all of us can ditch gluten and sugar—who'd keep the doughnut shops in business? The Greatest of All Treats is getting the G.O.A.T. treatment at Kane's Donuts. On game days, the Financial District shop's rolling out a Patriot-ic half dozen—dubbed the Brady Bunch—that nods to each Super Bowl win the quarterback's notched, plus a sixth for wishful thinking. / Sarah Hagman

BIG EAST: Rogue will serve a number of Asian-influenced items.

GOING ROGUE

A QUARTET PREPARES TO OPEN A SPOT NEAR TD GARDEN

ROGUE RESTAURANT AND LOUNGE
222 Friend St., Boston
(617-723-3222) rogueboston.com

THE FOUR GUYS BEHIND ROGUE, slated to open later this month in the shadow of TD Garden, believe the name for their forthcoming restaurant speaks for itself.

"We feel like what we're bringing to the neighborhood is something completely different," says co-owner Timothy Bartolomeu. "I feel like Rogue is a one-off. It doesn't really conform to anything, to any special cuisine or any kind of format. It kind of does its own thing."

Set to occupy the former North Star spot, Rogue will have a lounge area near the front windows for customers to enjoy a snack or drinks. Farther into the space is a 25-seat bar with a new front made out of 200 to 300 refurbished timbers. Tables fill out the rest of the space, with a 130-seat dining room to accommodate Garden patrons during any pregame rush. Those without tickets can keep an eye on whatever game is on thanks to 70-inch TVs that line the walls, and a DJ or live band will take over during late-night hours.

"The old space had three distinct, separate rooms in it, and you're not going to feel that in the new space," says partner Anthony DePinto. "We have a lot of standing space so I don't see it being congested."

Kevin Ye, who's worked at a number of restaurants north of Boston, is heading up the kitchen, which will serve a full sushi selection as well as other Asian-influenced dishes such as a coconut chicken sandwich with pineapple sauce and Asian lamb lollipops. The menu will also have American staples such as wings and a burger as well as plenty of snacks and a small plates section that will change seasonally. The bar offerings will include 30 draft beer taps, half from New England breweries, and a sizable selection of aged rums and aged bourbons. There will also be a house mai tai available on tap.

"It'll be not so much super craft cocktails, but more approachable," Bartolomeu says. "I didn't want you to have to wait 10 minutes to get a drink, but I did want you to still have some great options."

Bartolomeu, DePinto and Ye, joined by Michael DeSousa, are aware of the changing neighborhood, which long ago was the thriving West End. It later became an area that mostly catered to the Bruins and Celtics crowds, and now it's once again becoming more of a neighborhood with construction underway for the Hub on Causeway and Bulfinch Crossing projects.

"We do want to get all the people walking home from work—all these condos and everything," Bartolomeu says. "We want to make it a spot where after work you can come in for a couple of drinks, snacks or a meal, whatever it might be."

TAKE NOTE: The Bebop's beer-battered fish and chips dish comes with a few sides.

Good Eats: On Key

Music students gained a new hangout—and a new stage—in The Bebop, a tavern that opened near Berklee and the New England Conservatory in June. "My vision was a bar that you'd see in Austin or Nashville, where there's music playing seven days a week," says co-owner Tommy McCarthy. Most of the tunes will be provided by music students and faculty, who will likely hang around before or after a set to enjoy a menu of elevated pub food, like the beer-battered fish and chips. The two crispy Guinness-battered cod fillets are deep-fried and richly seasoned, served with a housemade tartar sauce, healthy portion of hand-cut fries and housemade coleslaw, plus a lightly dressed mixed green salad. It's a hearty meal—all the better to linger over a pint. "It's all about music and conversation. No TVs," McCarthy says. Sounds good. / Alexandra Cavallo

C'EST LE VINO

French wine vintages vary dramatically compared to those from most of our other preferred sources, but 2015 has proven to be a marvelous year of consistent ripeness in most regions. Almost always reliable, the white wines from Burgundy's Pouilly-Fuissé in 2015 are stellar across the board, particularly if you find mellow, silky textures appealing. This may never be the go-to appellation if your preference is for a wine brimming with minerality or sharp acidity, but Pouilly-Fuissé's accessible charm and medium-tier pricing currently make it a particularly good option. These picks are round, satisfying and delicate enough to complement mild, subtly flavored seafood and chicken dishes. / Sandy Block

LOUIS LATOUR POUILLY-FUISSÉ, 2015

This seventh-generation family producer offers wonderful quality throughout its range of white Burgundies, even among the négociant bottlings produced in larger quantities like this one. Velvety and soft, with an aroma of ripe apple, it features creamy richness along with hints of spice on the finish. Light enough to work with fluke crudo, this might convert die-hard Chardonnay bashers, as it doesn't show even a hint of tropical or oaky notes.

$27, Federal Wine & Spirits, Boston

DOMAINE FERRET POUILLY-FUISSÉ, 2015

Long the gold standard for Pouilly, the Ferret estate has been producing wine for more than 150 years and was one of the region's first properties to bottle its own production. Harvested from old vines grown on deep clay soils, the grapes at Ferret make a richly textured wine, with notes of vanilla, hazelnut and flint. Opulent and impeccably balanced, it has enough stuffing to stand up to lobster.

$48, Common Vines, Boston

JOSEPH DROUHIN POUILLY-FUISSÉ, 2015

One of Burgundy's other venerable family-owned houses, Drouhin produces a Pouilly with intriguing garden aromas, and notes of crisp apple, spring flowers and peach. A touch less ripe and more assertively citric than most other Pouilly wines, this lighter-bodied bottle's lively pear-like flavors are especially delicious with scallops or shrimp.

$35, Stor Market, Boston

ROLL THE TAPE: Hear more from playwright Rob Roth at improper.com.

READ TAPES

In the late '70s Truman Capote and Andy Warhol decided to create a Broadway play—though it never came to fruition. However, hours of recorded conversations between the two men about the project—and art, life and love—will receive a staging in Warhol Capote, a production adapted from the tapes by award-winning director Rob Roth We spoke with the first-time playwright ahead of the world premiere at the A.R.T.'s Loeb Drama Center on Sept. 9. / Alexondro Cavollo

HOW DID YOU DISCOVER THE TAPES? Ten years ago my boyfriend, now my husband, Patrick, forced me to go on a cruise against my will. It was a gay family cruise, with children. ... So I bought myself a new copy of The Andy Worhol Diories. I had read it 20 times before—no lie, it's my favorite book—but this time, in our state room hiding from the children, one of the entries said "Went into Truman's apartment, got six good tapes for the play." ... And that made me go, "Wait a minute, I'm going to find these and see if this is real."

HOW MANY TIMES DID YOU LISTEN TO THEM? I only listened to them twice in full. I've read them more than that. Once I pulled out the sections that I liked, there must have been like 300 pieces. ... And then I had these 300 chunks that I named. So there'd be one called "Liza" and "Studio 54" and "Marilyn Monroe" and "Sex," "Jealousy," "Love." I tried to boil the subject matter down to a word.

AS YOUR FIRST PLAY, WHAT WERE SOME CHALLENGES YOU FACED? You know, one of the hardest things was just not to give up, to keep going. I felt like because they—the Andy Warhol Foundation and the Capote trust—trusted me with this material, I have a responsibility, literally, to Andy and Truman to get this out there. So that kept me going. I wore a lot of Andy Warhol T-shirts every day.

IF YOU COULD SPEND AN EVENING WITH WARHOL OR CAPOTE, WHO WOULD YOU CHOOSE? Oh, that's so hard. I would choose Andy because Andy was less drunk. [Laughs.] I think that in the time of this play, which was 1978, Truman was in decline. And it's sad. So, if I had to choose, gun to my head, in 1978, I would have gone out with Andy

WHAT WOULD YOU TWO DO? Just sit and talk. Try to get him to talk. I'm not a nightclub person But going to Studio 54 with Andy might have been fun too.

Are you happy?

CHEESE, PLEASE

When her Brookline Village shop officially opens on Sept. 6, Jenn Mason will be selling what she considers the closest thing to happiness: cheese. The Curds & Co. owner plans to keep customers plenty pleased, stocking upward of 70 varieties, with 50 regularly available and many of which have been endorsed by a "cheese advisory board" that Mason's assembling as needed. Among the faves, there's wheels from this year's American Cheese Society best-in-show that beat out more than 2,000 competitors as well as reserved cheese from an Alpine artisan who's sending regular updates until November when the finished product comes down the mountain and across the Atlantic.

The store's cheesemongers are on hand, or guests can follow the labels affixed to each cheese to indicate which taste profile pairs well with it. "I'm always looking for ways to include the introvert shopper," quips Mason, who suggests perusing the stocked shelves for CC Made's rosemary caramel sauce to couple with a hard nutty cheese and a cookie or shortbread to put alongside a goat cheese—and whatever makes your cut can be splayed out on one of the shop's handmade wooden slabs or vintage boards.

Most importantly, Mason wants customers to know the stories behind the farms featured at Curds & Co. "Good cheese is not cheap," she says. "But you feel like you're getting the best deal in the world when you actually see what goes into that." / Sarah Hagman

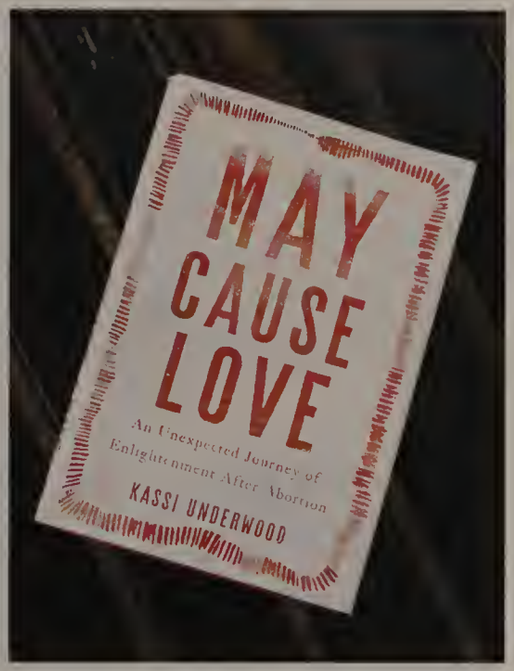
FINDING HER VOICE



A MEMOIR DETAILS HEARTBREAK AND A SPIRITUAL AWAKENING

May Cause Love* by Kassi Underwood
Published by HarperCollins, 338 pages, $27

TORMENTED FOR YEARS AFTER AN ABORTION, Kassi Underwood undertakes a fascinating quest as she seeks a way to deal with the guilt and grief from the decision she made as a 19-year-old college student. This memoir from a current Harvard Divinity School student begins when Kassi's boyfriend Will-B enlists in the military and she gets pregnant by the unstable, drug-using Noah. Kassi, vibrant but chaotic and drinking too much, terms the experience an "eggnancy" and chooses to have an abortion. Kassi is comforted by Will-B, and she follows Noah, who later becomes a dad and gives his baby their briefly considered name of Jade, which feels like a further pinch of punishment. Feeling like Jade's distant symbolic mother, she follows her online and then seeks out programs to stretch her soul toward forgiveness and acceptance. Trying anything for relief, she explores Buddhist, Jewish and Catholic workshops and healing rituals. They are mystical and exotic, and match Kassi's own wildness. Soon, the name "water baby" becomes a tolerable way to frame what she's lost.

Her story reads like a novel, including her romantic complexities, as both Will-B and Noah remain in her rocky, colorful life. This happens alongside her roiling positions on the abortion, including sorrow, defiance and self-forgiveness. One outing, for suffering pro-choice survivors, turns out to be a pro-life crowd, but Kassi eventually finds a simpatico group called pro-voice that acknowledges the commonalities among all women who've had abortions, as well as their male partners. Often irreverent and cheerful, Kassi's personal journey eventually blends with the political and, most meaningfully, the spiritual, leading to a surprising destination.

FROM PAGE 119: I used to brace myself never to apologize for my abortion, protecting my Sorry against anyone who might try to capture it and put it in a jar and bring it to the Sorry Laboratory to pick apart and misinterpret. But this apology was mine. We don't apologize just to be forgiven. We apologize to forgive ourselves. ◆

Traveler's Checks

Puerto Rico has three of the world's five bioluminescent bays. Tours are best scheduled during cloudy or moonless nights, but if it's tops on your agenda, avoid booking a stay five to eight nights prior to a full moon and two days after.

The Ritz-Carlton offers discounts on stays of three or more nights in deluxe rooms or suites through Dec. 22.

ENCHANTED ISLAND: Puerto Rico offers relaxation by the pool or rainforest adventures.

The Escape Artist / Carley D. Thornell

BUEN PROVECHO

WORK UP AN APPETITE ON A PUERTO RICAN GETAWAY.

THE FIRST IMPRESSION OF PUERTO RICO is not the sight of sandy beaches or the smell of suntan lotion. Rather, it is of a chorus unlike any other: a sweet singular song coming from tiny tree frogs endemic to the 100-mile-long island. This mating melody makes it easy to understand why the commonwealth is called the Enchanted Island of Rhythms and Flavors, a symphony only enhanced by the pounding muddle of mint for mojitos and the snap of flip-flops on the streets of Old San Juan.

Want to see those coqui frogs up close? Start with a tour of El Yunque Rainforest, less than an hour's drive from Old San Juan. You could rent a car to quickly get around, but then you wouldn't get the expertise of local guides like Ricky from Castillo Tours, who explains a bit about the Taino native peoples and expertly chases those elusive inch-long creatures. He'll introduce you to culantro, a cilantro-like herb used in lots of local dishes; and explain that many of the rainforest's treasures are used in the pharmaceutical industry that's taken a strong foothold in Puerto Rico.

The industry close behind is tourism. And the waterfront Ritz-Carlton, a short ride from the airport, is a popular spot for its candlelit meals, fun-filled days at the beach and spa-induced relaxation. Take one of JetBlue's daily direct flights in the afternoon and you can arrive just in time for dinner at the hotel's restaurant, BLT Steak. The steakhouse offers far more than its name suggests, serving fresh-caught fish alongside prime cuts of beef, while signature dishes like jalapeno mashed potatoes and coconut bread pudding with rum ice cream put a fun spin on traditional steakhouse fare by spotlighting local products. This won't be the last place you're offered mofongo, Puerto Rico's famous dish of thick soup with garlic and onions; you'll also encounter what natives wish their friends when each dish is delivered swiftly with a smile—"buen provecho" loosely translates to "bon appétit."

That same flavor and warm feeling can be found all across the island, especially on a Spoon Food Tours culinary and historical exploration, a five-course extravaganza led by guides such as Pablo Garcia, a walking encyclopedia with a true zest for all things Puerto Rico. You'll meet at Quincentennial Plaza in Old San Juan in the cool shadow of Tótem Telúrico, which was inspired by ancient pieces of Taino cookware unearthed on the site. You'll start off this Sunday brunch walk right, with a stop at the Don Ruiz roastery. Puerto Rico's coffee growing days are mostly in the past but there are still a few artisanal producers, and the Don Ruiz museum and cafe offers specialty brews to pair with pan de mallora, elevated ham and cheese sandwiches on sweet buttered bread. Save some room for locally caught snapper at a later stop, served in a savory tomato Creole sauce, alongside passion fruit sangria or a piña colada. The latter tipple was purportedly invented on the island, and you'll pass by Barrachina, the restaurant laying claim to it; make plans to visit later, or check out La Factoria, one of Old San Juan's hottest craft cocktail and wine bars.

It's good to get the lay of the land during a daytime tour—including an explanation of the iron-rich ballast lining the capital's streets—so you can follow this blue-brick road at night for a popsicle. The line of both locals and tourists snaking out the door at Señor Paleta's is a solid indication of the can't-miss treats-on-a-stick here, and the sound of live music from the nearby bandstand enhances the experience. For adult fun, head to Marmalade, where you'll get a rise out of the cocktail list with names as creative as the drinks. The tequila-spiked Global Warming, which heats up as its three-chili spherical ice cube melts, goes down well with almost everything on the extensive tasting menu.

There's unforgettable marmalade of a different kind back at the Ritz, where club-level access grants you three meals a day—including a killer homemade pineapple jam at breakfast—and unlimited beverages for those who prefer to simply chill out at the waterfront. Staff members are all too happy to whip up a piña colada as well, so you can take it down to the adjoining beach or recently renovated oceanfront pool. And if you're afraid of overdoing the sun, check out the spa, where "farm to table" extends to the massage table—many of the treatments include local produce or elements, including a coffee body polish, guava pedicure and hot-stone rubdown featuring waterfall-smoothed El Yunque Rainforest rocks. ◆

EASTIE CRUISING

CUNARD TAVERN BRINGS CASUAL HIP-BAR CHARM TO JEFFRIES POINT.

THE JUGGERNAUT OF GENTRIFICATION continues to steam through Boston, rolling beyond the downtown core to our outer residential neighborhoods. Eastie native and owner Philip Frattaroli must have noticed this when he opened the new Cunard Tavern a few blocks from Maverick Square. If there's a marker of the influx of more-prosperous residents, it's places like this: a sleek but casual spot with edgier, more eclectic fare than is served at the old neighborhood joints. If you can remember when the South End's Franklin Cafe, Spring Hill's Highland Kitchen or City Point's Local 149 rolled in, you know that for better or worse, a Starbucks, doggie bakery and yoga studio aren't far behind.

Located on a quiet block a few hundred yards from the harbor, Cunard occupies the first floor of a new building that Frattaroli erected on the former site of his grandfather's cabinet-making shop. Above it are condos, a barre studio (already) and a cunning fourth-floor deck that can coddle three-dozen patrons with open-air drinks and snacks. The 65-seat dining room with its 10-seat bar is admirably airy and spare, with arty nautical accents throughout; when opened on temperate evenings, multiple French doors lend the delightful feel of a big sidewalk cafe.

Chef Anthony Pino also grew up in the neighborhood but clearly doesn't want to plate another roster of old-school Italian-American or basic pub fare. His Cuban spring rolls ($8), which fill and deep-fry a thick eggroll wrapper with ham, braised pork shoulder, pickles and Swiss, plus mustard for dipping, are a hefty plate of superb drinking food. With his knack for elevated bar snacks, it's puzzling when cider-glazed wings ($8) arrive flabby and underfried, their cider-chili glaze adding sugar but no capsicum kick. Each grilled fish taco ($3) stuffs a grill-browned flour tortilla with a pretty, generous pile of grilled fish, lightly-pickled red cabbage, chili aioli and mango, but the fish's strong flavor suggests an undisclosed subbing of bluefish for the advertised snapper.

Takoyaki ($12) doesn't much resemble the Osaka street-food snack of pan-cooked seafood fritters, showing neither a well-browned crust nor much octopus flavor, but is pleasant enough in a glaze. Meanwhile, a meal-sized grilled asparagus salad ($7) is terrific: grilled white and green asparagus alongside a mound of frisée dressed with Gorgonzola, strawberries and slivered almonds judiciously dressed with cider vinaigrette. Crudos are suddenly on a lot of menus in Boston, but Cunard's version, a Sicilian-style tuna crudo ($12), shows the perils of essaying barely-marinated raw fish with spare accompaniments: Here, citrus vinaigrette, pistachio and fennel cannot conceal the less-than-pristine quality and blandness of the fairly thick-cut squares of tuna.

Entrees likewise share hits and misses. The Samuel Cunard burger ($15) is a sensational example of a big pub-style burger, cooked perfectly to temperature on a quality, slightly-oversized bun layered with shredded lettuce, American cheese, tartar sauce and some terrific fried whole-belly clams, though the accompanying mix of potato and sweet potato fries is disappointingly limp. An attractive plate of grilled portabellas ($15) topped with nicely browned queso fresco on a mess of arugula is marred by too heavy a hand with balsamic, and seems a bit meager to anchor a dinner. Brick chicken ($15) doesn't have quite the crispness of skin one would like in this preparation, but benefits mightily from a smashing peach/almond chutney reminiscent of Japanese "Vermont" brown curry, plus al dente, bacon-bit-sprinkled Brussels sprouts. So-so seafood quality again haunts the grilled lime shrimp ($18), its big tail-on prawns mushy and bland, though the creamy chili/avocado mac-and-cheese underneath, crunchy with toasted breadcrumbs, adds comforting heft. Grilled swordfish ($20), a big, thinnish, triangular cut cooked a bit past currently fashionable medium temperature, fares much better, helped by excellent, well-crusted roasted fingerlings and grilled broccoli rabe.

The bar program boasts a nicely nerdy, all-New-England roster of 10 draft beers ($5.50-$8) and another seven in cans ($5-$20). A sturdy 30-bottle wine list ($30-$96, most under $50) hops between Old and New Worlds with plenty of modest finds like the custom-family-label Frattaroli Montepulciano d'Abruzzo ($8 per glass, $30 per bottle). The list of specialty cocktails aims crafty and succeeds in conception if not always in execution. The Smoke Show ($14)—a margarita riff of mezcal, orange liqueur and sour mix, garnished with pickled jalapeños—on one night reflects careful measuring and good chill, but on another arrives overdiluted and acidly out of balance. At these prices, the entire bartending cast needs to demonstrate equal technical chops.

Service ably suits the friendly neighborhood-joint ambiance, though a little more training on proper wine service would not go amiss. Hard surfaces throughout contribute to noise levels that just graze harshness at peak hours; low talkers are easier to hear when the French doors are open. Cunard Tavern may be navigating a slightly-overlong shakedown cruise at the moment, but the forward-looking concept and earnest charm of the space are undeniable, and the menu already has enough bright spots to keep the New Eastie crowd coming back. Iron out the wrinkles in the more ambitious food and drink options, and it may even attract cruisers from across the water. ◆

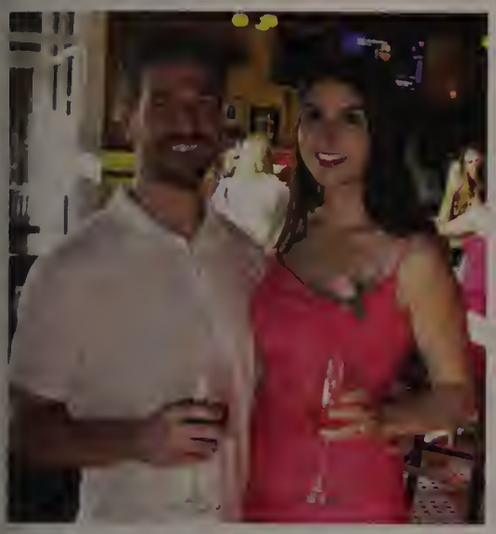
➜ The fifth annual Bombshells Against Breast Cancer brought the women of New England's media together at M.J. O'Connor's Westin Waterfront on Aug. 16 to raise money for the Ellie Fund. About 25 honorary bombshells mingled with 125 party guests, who enjoyed food, drinks, prizes and—as pink was the official color—cotton candy on the restaurant's patio. The party raised more than $4,000 for the charity.

➜ On Aug. 15, six teams of local chefs competed in the second annual Ultimate Food Rescue Challenge, during which they were tasked with assembling dishes using ingredients revealed just a few hours before the event held at Capo Restaurant & Supper Club. The creative results were enjoyed by 170 guests, who also indulged in raffles and auctions to raise $25,000 for the hunger-relief charity Three Squares New England.



2. Sasha Purpura, executive director at Food For Free, and Rachel Kinney, SNAP benefits advocate at Jewish Family & Children's Service of Greater Boston

3. Will Clark, general manager, and Mia Andreoli, manager, both at Capo Restaurant & Supper Club

4. Joseph Walsh, president and CEO of Direct Federal Credit Union, and wife Darlene Dumont, public service program director at Lean Enterprise Institute

4. Andrew Sparrow, mechanical engineer at R.W. Sullivan Engineering, and fiancee Olivia Vanni, Inside Track columnist at The Boston Herald

1. Kati Sigel, executive director at Three Squares New England, and event founder Gregory Jundanian, managing director at CYS Investments

5. Ricky Ashenfelter and Emily Malina, co-founders of Spoiler Alert

Q: I AM A 35 YEAR- OLD WOMAN AND AM NOT HAPPY WITH MY UPPER ARMS. EVEN THOUGH I EXERCISE, MY UPPER ARMS HAVE EXTRA FAT AND I AM SELF-CONSCIOUS IN SLEEVELESS TOPS.

A: The FDA has recently approved another use for CoolSculpting: upper arms. One treatment is usually enough, and you will see up to a 25% reduction of any fat in your upper arms which will give you a nice contour.

Coolsculpting is a very effective non-invasive body contouring treatment which freezes unwanted fat, killing off fat cells which are then naturally eliminated from your body. No needles, no surgery, and no downtime. It is safe and effective.

It can be used to reduce fat in many parts of our body: stomach, love handles, back fat, thighs, and knees, for example. After treatment, our body gradually removes the "dead" fat cells. Results are visible within six weeks of treatment and the final results are seen after three months.

At SkinHealth, our clients have seen remarkable results with CoolSculpting!

KOGONADA MAKES A WELL-CONSTRUCTED CINEMATIC DEBUT.

IF YOU'VE HAD YOUR FILL OF THIS SUMMER'S endless offerings of comic book heroes and things that go BOOM!, you could do far worse than spend a couple of hours cleansing your palate with the quiet, masterful cinematic debut of writer/director/editor Kogonada. The noted video essayist has previously cut together layered deconstructions of the work of directors such as deceased Japanese master Yasujiro Ozu and his contemporary counterpart, Hirokazu Koreeda. In Columbus, Kogonada wears his influences on his sleeve (even his name is borrowed from Ozu's screenwriting partner, Kogo Noda), but unlike many first-time directors, he's created something greater than a mere homage.

Certainly, Kogonada and his talented cinematographer Elisha Christian expertly utilize the one-point perspective favored by Ozu and auteurs like Stanley Kubrick. There's also at least one moment where they casually observe children at play—a move that's straight out of Koreeda's playbook. But while it's safe to say that Kogonada has drawn on the deep well of his influences, he also avoids simply copying his cinematic forebears, even as he adopts a style that's far more Asian-influenced than your average American independent.

Nevertheless, his young heroine, recent high school graduate Casey (Haley Lu Richardson from last year's Split and The Edge of Seventeen, making a hugely expressive breakthrough in a lead role) is very much an American analogue of the type of character typically played by Setsuko Hara in one of Ozu's many family dramas. She's selflessly willing to sacrifice her own hopes and dreams in order to care for a parent, and in Ozu's case, this was almost universally a father played in numerous films by the great Chishu Ryu. But here, the parent is a maternal one, Maria (Michelle Forbes), who's part of the working class and also a recovering meth addict.

Unlike many first-time directors, he's created something greater than a mere homage.

"Meth and modernism are really big here," Casey observes during one of her extended chats with Jin (John Cho in a more muted mode than his turns as Sulu in Star Trek), a translator for a Korean book publisher. Jin has flown from Seoul to Columbus, Indiana, to be at the bedside of his estranged father, a renowned architect who fell ill during the film's opening scene and now lies comatose as his partner Eleanor (Parker Posey, doing reliably good work in a small role) sits vigil.

Casey and Jin first cross paths at the local library, where she has a job made more tolerable due to the attention of Gabe (Rory Culkin), an overeducated introvert who enjoys his job precisely because he has the privilege of working alongside her. One day, she's snapped out of her metaphorical catatonia when she observes Jin exiting a cab at the hospital, across the street from the library.

Encountering him a second time on a smoke break, she overhears him speaking Korean on the phone. Offering this captivating—if initially abrasive—man a cigarette, she inquires if he might be related to Jae Yong Lee (Joseph Anthony Foronda), the visiting lecturer who she was planning to go see. She soon discovers that the professor is Jin's father, and a tentative friendship forms as Casey becomes what Jin calls his "tour guide," showing him a number of Columbus' architectural landmarks in this modernist mecca that's home to structures by I.M. Pei, James Polshek and Eero Saarinen.

At first, she doesn't believe him when he tells her, "I don't know shit about architecture, or care." But he's captivated enough by her passion that he continues to indulge her as their casual strolls increase in frequency, and their conversations drift toward the parental problems that keep them both walking in circles.

While Kogonada is fairly anonymous—and his birth name remains a mystery—a few biographical details have emerged; like Jin, he's from Seoul. He immigrated to the United States with his family when he was a child, eventually landing in the Midwest. Despite this, it's Casey who stands as Kogonada's surrogate—a supremely bright individual who deconstructs art while sharing a passion and enthusiasm with others.

While you may admire the scenery and learn a bit about Columbus' architectural history, it's the superb, understated performances that make the movie's minimalist plot work. As friends, Richardson and Cho project a shared intimacy that's rarely captured so well, and like the best onscreen couples, Casey and Jin linger in your memory long after the credits have rolled. ◆

THE FRED TAYLOR ENDOWED SCHOLARSHIP FUND BENEFIT CONCERT comes to Berklee Performance Center on Sept. 12.

Music / Paul Robicheau

AND ALL THAT JAZZ

GENRE ALL-STARS LAUNCH A SCHOLARSHIP FOR A FAMED LOCAL PROMOTER.

FRED TAYLOR HAS MADE A LOT OF FRIENDS over the years, including some of the biggest names in music. From the mid-'60s through the '70s, Taylor ran adjoining clubs on Boylston Street, booking Duke Ellington, Charles Mingus and Miles Davis at the Jazz Workshop while introducing Boston audiences to Bruce Springsteen, Bob Marley and Billy Joel at Paul's Mall. And from 1989 until earlier this year, Taylor served as artistic director at Scullers Jazz Club, presenting the Boston debuts of Norah Jones, Jamie Cullum and Michael Bublé while nurturing such talents as Danilo Pérez, Esperanza Spalding and Grace Kelly (pictured with Taylor).

"He's done so much for me to open doors, introduce me to people—there are so many agents and musicians that I've met and before I can say a word, they say, 'Fred's been telling me about you,'" says Brookline-bred saxophonist Kelly, 25, who was only 13 when Taylor first booked her band to play Scullers. "He does that for every young talent that really perks his ears."

Now it's time to return the favor. After Taylor was let go from Scullers in February (he's since gone on to book shows at the Cabot in Beverly, among other venues), Kelly met with her parents and local bandleader Bo Winiker, who proposed a scholarship in Taylor's name. "We were so excited, because of the idea of his legacy living on forever," Kelly says. Berklee President Roger Brown embraced the plan for his college.

"What has always stood out to me with Fred is his genuine interest in the music."

So on Sept. 12, Kelly will co-host an all-star Fred Taylor Endowed Scholarship Fund benefit concert at the Berklee Performance Center. In addition to Kelly and pianist Pérez, performers will include vocalists Kurt Elling, Catherine Russell and Kat Edmonson, drummer Terri Lyne Carrington, bassist John Patitucci, trumpeter Jason Palmer and harmonica ace James Montgomery.

"We all love Fred!" says guitarist Pat Metheny, who'll appear to add a few words about Taylor. "He's an absolute original, an icon, and one of the best people any of us who have known over the years could ever hope to know."

Metheny first met Taylor in the mid-'70s when he performed at the Jazz Workshop with vibraphonist Gary Burton and was subsequently booked to play a week with his own trio featuring bassist Jaco Pastorius and drummer Bob Moses. "Think of the amount of great stuff he has heard in his life," Metheny says. "What has always stood out to me with Fred is his genuine interest in the music."

A Newton native, Taylor bought his first record, Dizzy Gillespie's "Salt Peanuts," in about 1949. "There are two elements that would frame my career: music—and predominately jazz, but a broad spectrum of music—and humor," says Taylor, 88, who also booked comedians at Paul's Mall, including the Boston debut of Lily Tomlin. "Those are my two mainstays. And Dizzy possessed both of those."

In 1952, Taylor brought an early reel-to-reel recorder to George Wein's Storyville to document a set by pianist Dave Brubeck that they turned into a recording for Brubeck's label. Taylor, who worked for Serta mattresses throughout the '50s, went to Lynn to tape jazz organist Joe Bucci at a friend's urging. They became Bucci's managers and got him signed to Capitol Records. Taylor's music path was set.

"It's always been an osmosis," Taylor says. "One thing leads to another, and I just go with it. My life's M.O. has been that I didn't have a specific goal in mind. I just saw something that looked interesting and said, 'Let me work with it.'"

He knew how to work with the famously surly Davis, who brushed off Taylor's initial greeting at the Workshop. "He said 'I came to play,' and I said, 'OK, we start at 9, we close at 2. You're in charge,' and I walked away," Taylor says. "He shot me, I shot him, and he loved it." From there, Davis only worked with Taylor in Boston, including his famed 1981 comeback shows at Kix in Kenmore Square.

Most everyone playing the Berklee benefit has their own history with Taylor, who saw a teenaged Carrington sit in with Art Blakey at the Workshop and discovered Edmonson and then-Berklee student Pérez in small jazz rooms. "We even talked to Fred about his favorite songs and what he'd like artists to sing and play," Kelly says. "People are going to be bouncing in and out. It's going to be a fun, playful thing. One thing that's always important in jazz is not to over-rehearse."

Sounds a lot like Taylor's storied career. ◆

DANGER DAD

IT'S TIME FOR MY KIDS TO SWAP MATCHBOX CARS FOR MATCHES.

When I was a kid, we climbed really tall trees. We dug holes deep enough to bury us. I practiced welding my Matchbox cars with sparklers. My friend Joe and I would light batteries on fire to see what happens (they blow up). One time I wiped out on my bike and hit my head on the pavement, soaking my T-shirt in blood and going blind for about five minutes. By the time I was 11, my 9-year-old brother and I were driving around in the woods by ourselves in an old Subaru.

A 1980s childhood tended to feature a degree of independence that seems scarcely imaginable now. I mean, my parents sent me to France with people they barely knew. This is true: A French kid, Chris, moved down the road from me, and we became friends. The next summer he invited me to go to France with him for a month, and soon enough I was in the Rhône region playing pétanque and drinking Champagne at a neighborhood block party. I was 11. It was awesome. And my parents had no idea where I was. It's not like I could drop a pin.

Childhood these days is considerably more managed, and I know this because I'm the manager. Parents are required at the bus stop. My kids own multiple helmets. When we watched July Fourth fireworks, we gave them each a Bluetooth Tile so we could electronically track them if they got lost in the crowd. And my kids will not be playing football. Have you seen those CTE studies?

It all feels kind of lame, especially in comparison to some cool parents who live up the street from us. Their boys are the same age as ours, but they're way more free-range, '80s-style kids. For example, last year I was doing a photo shoot with some electric cars in a field about halfway between our houses. At one point, this 4-year-old kid came screaming down the hill on his bike and I waited for the inevitable parent to appear. But none did. "Where's your mom?" I asked the kid. He replied, "We drove past and saw you doing this so she said

BALANCING ACT: Letting kids take the wheel can prove to be a challenge.

I could ride over and watch as long as I stay out of the way." This blew my mind. My 4-year-old didn't even know how to ride a bike, and this Wildling was crashing photo shoots by himself. When we were done, I gave him a ride back to his house, where his 6-year-old brother was wandering around with a bow and arrow and repeatedly shooting it into the lawn a few feet in front of him. I remarked that it was a cool bow and arrow, and he said, "My mom said I can shoot it, as long as I aim at the ground." This seemed like a sensible policy for his Fisher Price My First Weaponry.

Now, do my kids have archery gear and carte blanche to roam the neighborhood? Not yet. But I am trying to loosen the reins. The older one has a Crazy Cart, which goes 12 mph and has no brakes. I'm encouraging some tree climbing. And we're getting heavy into s'mores, which are definitely the most dangerous dessert. You're handing a 5-year-old a sharp stick and encouraging him to thrust it into a roaring fire. For our kid, s'mores delivers his two favorite things,

He said, "My mom said I can shoot it, as long as I aim at the ground." This seemed like a sensible policy for his Fisher Price My First Weaponry.

candy and open flames, simultaneously. And I get to whittle sticks with a Leatherman, which is a pretty badass dad thing to do. I haven't tried throwing any batteries into the fire, but maybe we'll work up to that.

I'll surely never replicate the anything-goes experience of the pre-digital childhood, but I'm trying to avoid raising pallid little mush-drones who experience life through an iPad. And besides, kids find danger no matter what you do. The other day I heard our kids' slightly older cousins discussing how one of them crawled into a storm drain to retrieve a lost ball, which meant I had to lecture them on Baby Jessica and evil clowns who live in the sewer. And last month I picked our kids up at camp to find the younger one blood-spattered, with a huge slash on his cheek. What kind of Ninja Warrior Lord of the Flies program am I sending them to, you ask? Golf camp. His brother hit him in the face with a 7-iron.

But at least they were outside doing something. Golf is good that way, so we've started playing a little 9-hole course where you can use gas-powered carts. One day I was about 100 yards from both my ball and the cart, where my kid was waiting. Since I was too lazy to walk back, I yelled over to him to pull up the cart. He hunched over the wheel, stretched his legs as far as he could and started driving down the fairway. We were alone on the course, but I hadn't noticed a couple sitting on their back patio adjacent to the green. "Hey!" the guy said. "Is that little kid driving the golf cart?" Damn right he is. ◆

THE WRITE STUFF

THE PROLIFIC NOVELIST CHATS ABOUT LITERARY SUPERSTITIONS, POLITICAL PARALLELS AND INTERNET PORN.

BEST-SELLING NOVELIST TOM PERROTTA, 56, WAS born and raised in Garwood, New Jersey, and graduated from Yale before receiving a master's degree from Syracuse. He's the author of nine books, including Bad Haircut, Election, Little Children and The Leftovers, which have all been adapted for film or television. The Leftovers, an HBO cult hit, completed its third and final season in June, and his latest novel, Mrs. Fletcher, about an empty-nester divorcee who becomes involved in online porn, was released in August. He appears at the Boston Book Festival in October. He lives in Belmont with his wife and children.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Do you have a writing ritual?
TOM PERROTTA: Yeah, but it's a boring one. I get up. I drink my coffee. I read the paper. I go upstairs at about 10. The only rule I make for myself is that I can't leave until I write something new. What that means is that by the time I sit around for hours, go down and have lunch, it's around 1 in the afternoon, and I'm so disgusted with myself that I force myself to write something.

Any superstitions around writing? I just need to have some kind of liquid nearby. I can't write without coffee or tea.

Biggest thing your book Election had in common with the 2016 presidential election? [Laughs.] I'd have to say that in both, the asshole won.

What's the weirdest thing about seeing a story you've created then adapted into a movie or TV show? It's just a completely uncanny feeling. It's pretty much exactly what I'd imagined, but the people are much better looking.

Which of the movies or TV shows that have been made out of your books do you think is the best? That's like picking your favorite kid. I'm really proud of all of them. I definitely put the most blood and sweat into The Leftovers, though, so I guess I'm closest to it.

What did you think of Justin Theroux's promise about doing full frontal if the show got an Emmy? Too little, too late.

In The Leftovers, do you see parallels with the disaffected, disenfranchised Americans who are in the headlines so much these days? I didn't at first. At first, I thought I was writing about 9/11 or other events that kind of divide history into before and after. But I remember starting the book right after the 2008 financial collapse, and thinking, "Wow! This world I thought was so stable could just melt away." Then Obama came in, and things got stabilized for people like me, but what I've realized is that for the Trump voters, the world really did sorta end for them. So yes, there are people who feel like they've got nothing to lose, and it's a scary situation.

Book you're currently writing? None. I often need a little recovery time and I'm touring right now. This break is a bit longer than usual, because I wrote Mrs. Fletcher while I was also working on The Leftovers, and they just ended at the same time. I haven't started on anything big since.

Book you're currently reading? Killers of the Flower Moon, about the Osage murders.

Book you've had on your nightstand forever but have never even cracked? Like everybody else, I have that translation of Proust and I keep thinking, "Someday, I'll get to it." It's Lydia Davis' translation, and I've heard it's great, but I just haven't gotten there yet.

Author you are most flattered by, or welcome comparisons to? Years ago, Will Blythe, bless his heart, compared Little Children to Chekhov, and that's the ultimate compliment. Chekhov's a saintly figure to writers, the embodiment of a kind of literary decency. So that meant a lot to me.

Favorite author of all time? At times, I would have to say Honoré de Balzac, just because he wrote so many books. It was almost like he was trying to get his whole world onto the page, and I almost admire the idea of that more than I do the books themselves.

Are any of your fictional towns based on Belmont? Not really. It's a funny thing. I feel like Belmont is so specific, with its mix of people and its closeness to Cambridge. If you look at the towns I write about, I think they might be a little bit farther away from the city. They're more anonymous and middle-of-the-road. Belmont is too specific for my purposes.

So is your neighborhood full of MILFs? [Laughs.] On my computer, yes.

Did you do a lot of research into porn sites to write Mrs. Fletcher? You know, I unwittingly did, over a long period of time. I'd been interested in porn as a kind of form of human information and interaction for a long time. I didn't specifically look into this MILF stuff until I was working on the book, but just the idea of how technology has changed sexuality is something I've been thinking about a lot for a long time.

Does it scare you, the way the internet has made pornography available even to your teenage kids? Yeah, in a way, it's more shocking to me than it is to them. It's just a fact of their lives. I keep thinking, "If I had access to this when I was 15, God knows when I would have come out of my room." But my son seems to take it in stride. As far as I can tell, he's not that interested. But it should be concerning to all of us.

One book you wish you wrote? Any story by Flannery O'Connor I'd put in that corner. I read her with a sense of awe.

Any literary guilty pleasures? I never feel guilty about them. I read a lot of crime fiction, but I think some crime writers, like Dennis Lehane and Megan Abbott, are some of the best writers we have. To me, that's just a very vibrant corner of American literature.

One word you overuse? "Just" and "really." It started in conversation, I think, but it's slipped into my writing. My editor was circling the word "just" all over my prose, and I don't know when that started.

Any time a celebrity who was a fan of your work had you star-struck? Well, one time I was doing a reading in Seattle. Afterward, they bring you books belonging to people who wanted to come but couldn't, and one of them was from Peter Buck of R.E.M. I am the hugest fan of R.E.M. ever, and so the fact that he was going to read my book was a very proud moment for me.

Your idea of perfect happiness? I don't think it's possible. ◆

SILENT STRENGTH

DONT'A

Hightower never had a "Welcome to the NFL" moment, where a grizzled veteran knocked him to the ground and delivered an equally menacing scowl. Instead, Hightower's NFL debut five years ago could've come from a fairy tale—or a highlight reel.

In front of more than a dozen friends and family members in his native state of Tennessee, the rookie linebacker made a quick impact in the second quarter. Jake Locker, the opposing team's quarterback, prepared to pass, and Hightower's fellow rookie Chandler Jones knocked the ball out of his hand. With the ball bouncing around, Hightower alertly scooped it up on the 6-yard line and headed for the end zone, where he rumbled in for what stands as the only defensive touchdown of his career.

"I tried to make sure that I timed the bounce so I could pick it up and not get hit. And it just so happened that I did that, and at the same time Rob Ninkovich came out of nowhere and ended up taking a bullet for me," Hightower says. "It was a great game, and it was a great play. Me and Chandler still talk about it to this day."

From the time he arrived in Foxboro, the first-round pick's performance was never in doubt. In the two Super Bowls that Hightower's played in, he's made game-saving signature defensive plays that helped secure both wins. Last season, he earned second-team, All-Pro honors and was recently named one of NFL Network's Top 100 players in the 32-team league. Now, months after signing a four-year, $43.5 million contract, Hightower recalls that finding his footing in the cold, sports-obsessed Northeast corner of the country took some time. But currently set to enter his sixth season with the Patriots, the veteran is comfortable as one of the faces of the Patriots champion defense and he has stepped his game up off the field as well, boosting diabetes awareness with his burgeoning charity efforts. Those two factors are enough to get the self-described Southern Gentleman in a New England state of mind for the foreseeable future.

"I have to get out of my shell," says Hightower, 27. "It's not anything like home, so I had to definitely get used to that the first couple of years, but I love what New England has done for me in the past, going on six years. And I appreciate everything around it."

Hightower remembers how the on-field adjustment seemed easy, going from a well-oiled national title contender at the University of Alabama to a well-oiled Super Bowl contender. It was figuring out how to handle his personal independence that was more difficult.

"Football wasn't too hard. Nick [Saban] and Bill [Belichick] are two peas in a pod," he says. "But just learning how to be a pro and how to manage my time and going through all that stuff, and getting used to the weather and the area. It's a little different in the South."

Teammate and fellow defensive captain Devin McCourty joined the Patriots two years before Hightower. He says the combination of Hightower's size and athleticism was the first thing he noticed about him, an impression that was solidified during an offseason training practice in which the 6-foot-3-inch, 265-pound defender leapt high into the air to intercept a pass.

"IT'S NOT ANYTHING LIKE HOME, SO I HAD TO DEFINITELY GET USED TO THAT THE FIRST COUPLE OF YEARS, BUT I LOVE WHAT NEW ENGLAND HAS DONE FOR ME IN THE PAST, GOING ON SIX YEARS. AND I APPRECIATE EVERYTHING AROUND IT."

"To make a move like that kinda blew me away," says McCourty, who notes that Hightower's quiet persona extends not only to the meeting rooms, where he'll only speak when necessary, but also to his offseason home in Tennessee.

"I was down visiting him, and I got to go over to High's house, and it's the same thing. He lives in a nice development, where he says there used to be only like 8 or 10 houses, and now there's like 20 to 30. And he wants to move because there are so many people," McCourty says. "He likes being to himself, and he's a quiet guy. That's just him—even in the locker room, he's always going to be the guy who's kind of quiet and to himself."

A typical day away from the stadium might include Hightower puffing on a cigar or drinking a glass of bourbon or beer. And there's a good chance he'll get completely absorbed into a video game: "I'm a big video gamer, so I play Call of Duty or Battlefield or something like that. I can probably play that for like 4 or 5 hours and not even know a minute has gone by."

While he might be reserved off the field, he's anything but during a game, especially with the outcome on the line. In this year's Super Bowl against Atlanta, with the Patriots trailing 28-12 and a little more than 8 minutes left in the game, Hightower stepped up with a big play. As Falcons' quarterback Matt Ryan looked to pass, Hightower rushed toward him and knocked the ball out of his right hand. The Patriots recovered the loose ball and scored a touchdown within minutes, making it a one-possession game in what would become the biggest comeback victory in Super Bowl history.

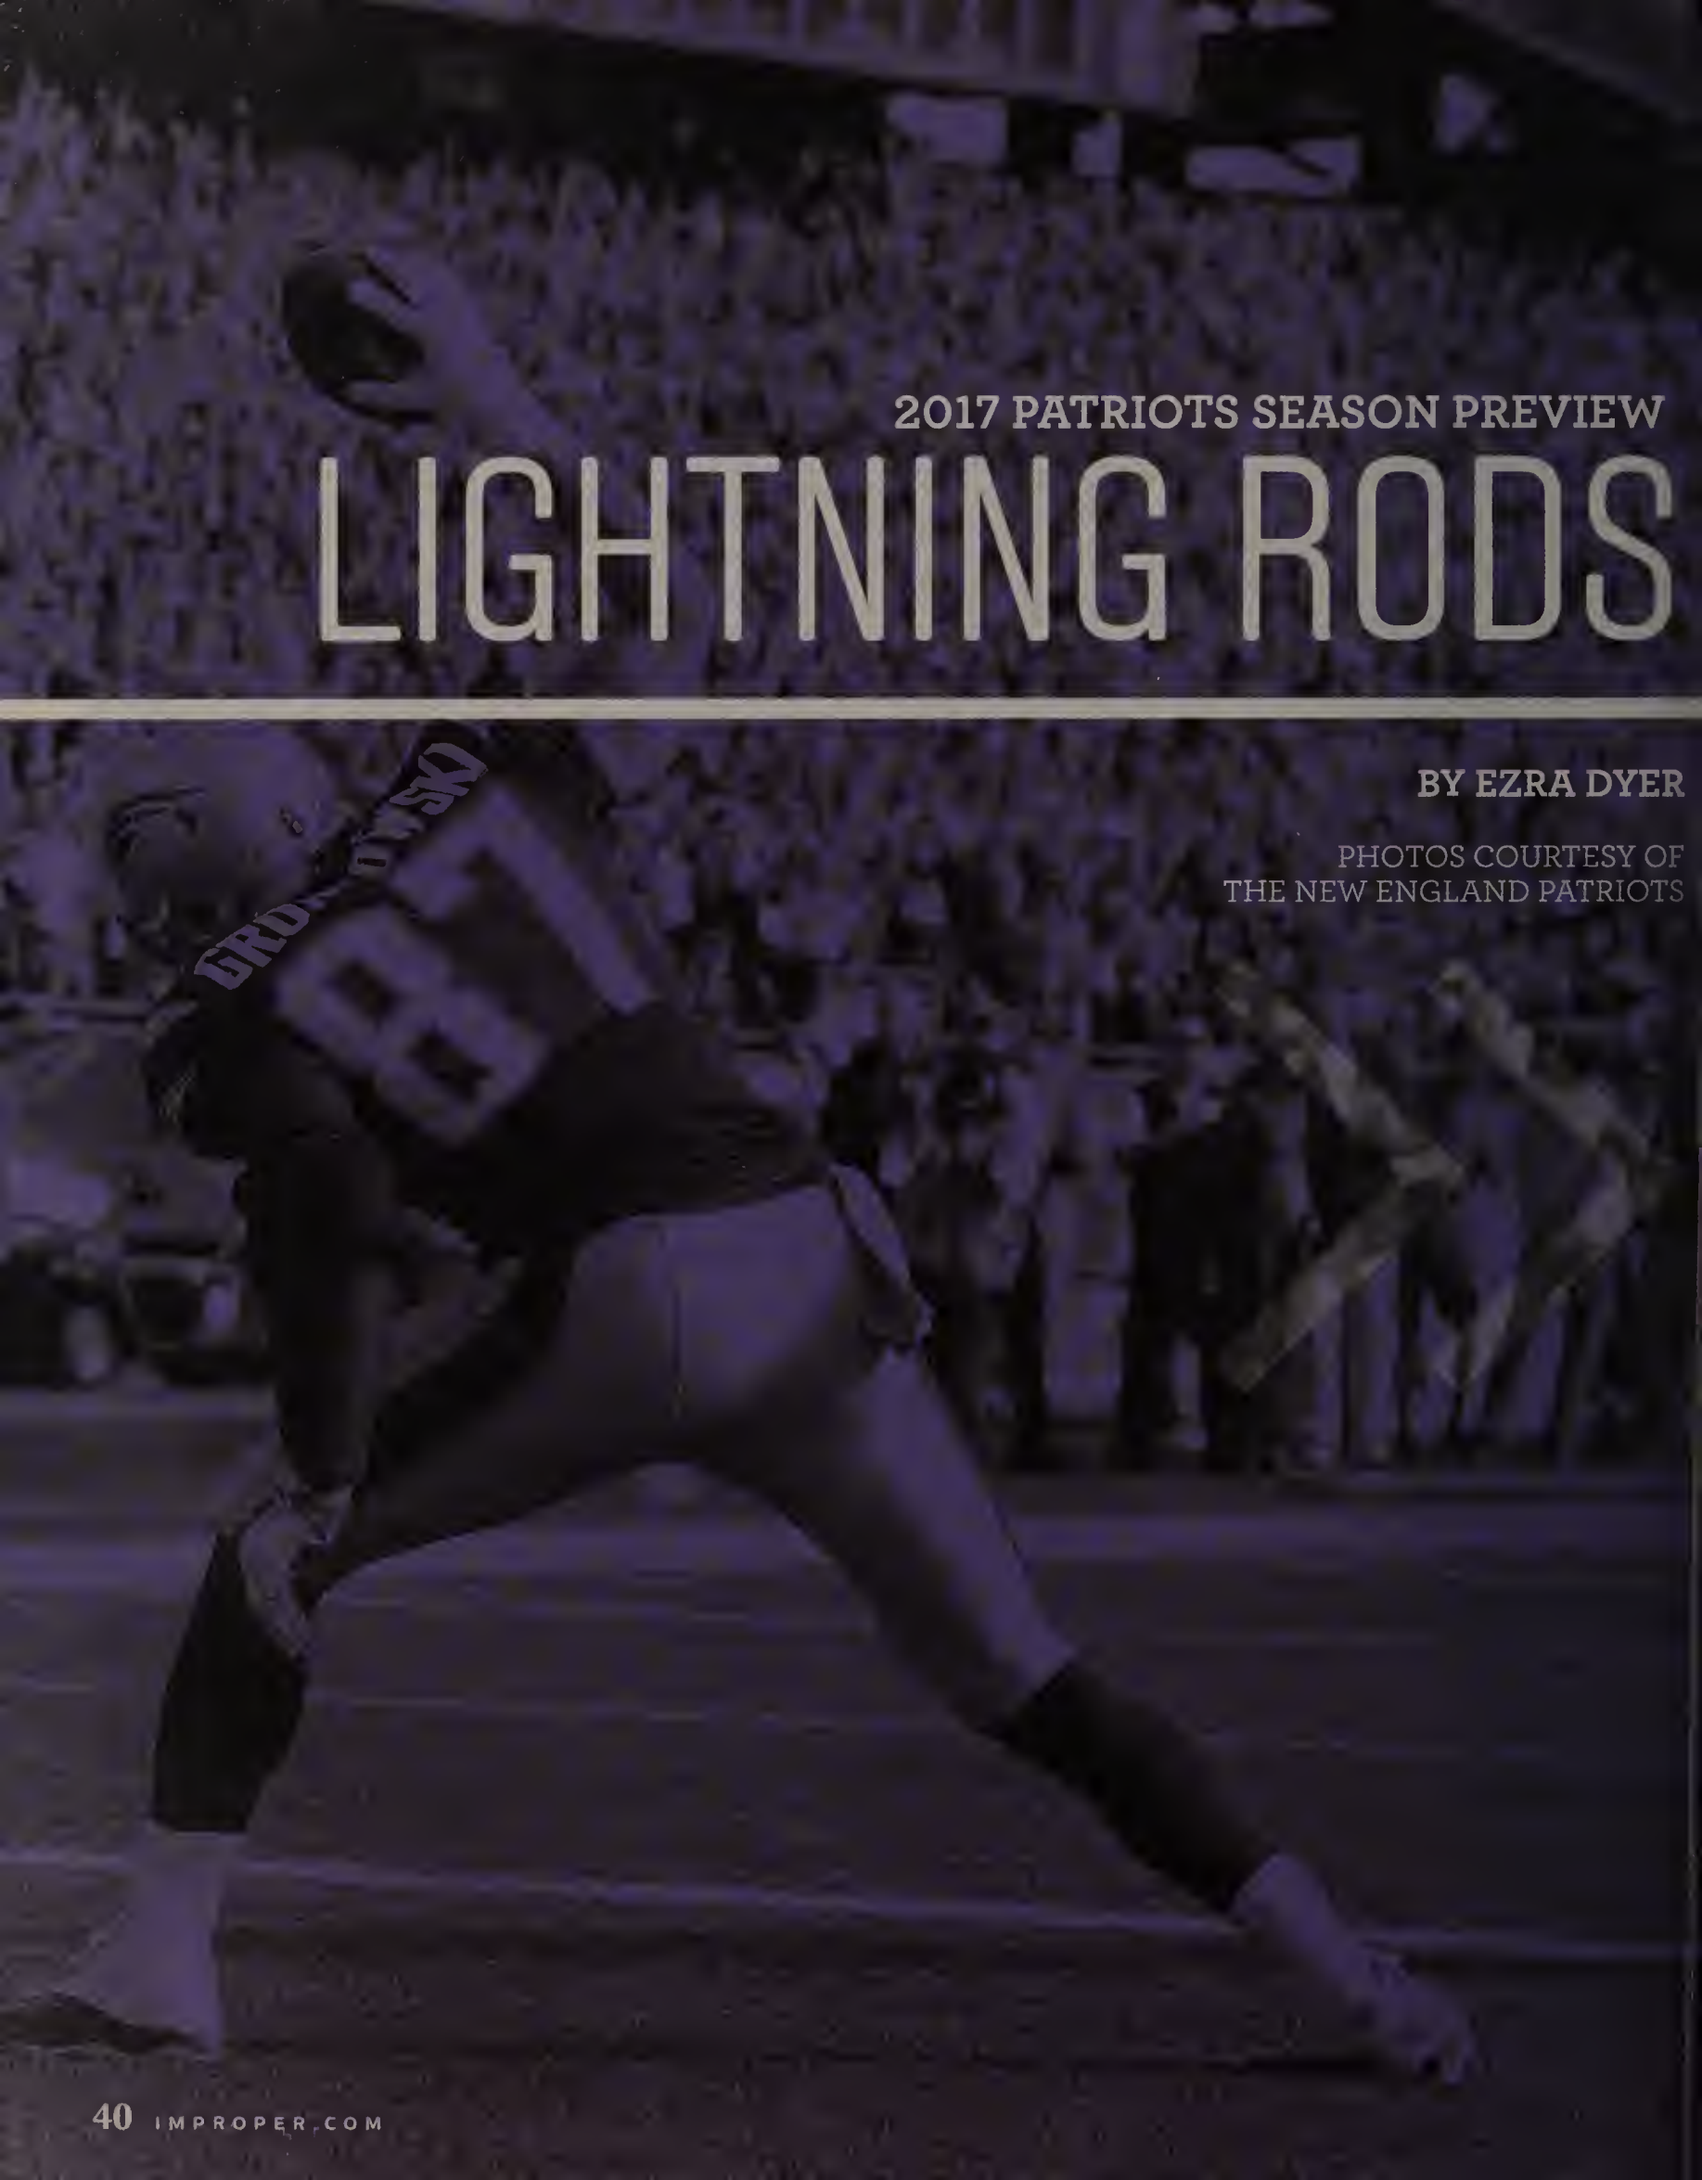
Hightower made a similarly important play in Super Bowl XLIX against Seattle. With about a minute left in the game, the Seahawks were on the 5-yard line when they handed the ball to Marshawn Lynch. Hightower broke free of his initial blocker and stopped Lynch 36 inches away from a game-winning score. That tackle set up Malcolm Butler's famed end-zone interception, which stymied Seattle and clinched the first Super Bowl in a decade for the Patriots. It's those types of plays that give Hightower a reputation as a big-game player, a label that he brushes off.

"I'm just trying not to let my teammates down. There was a game in 2013 when we were playing Miami. Long story short, Marcus Thigpen ran this ridiculous route on me and caught the ball. It just so happened that if we would've won that game, we would've had a better playoff percentage [and played the AFC Championship at home]," Hightower says. "We ended up getting to the AFC Championship game and losing at Denver. After that game with that play, I always told myself that I wouldn't be the reason why we lost."

That one play, in a regular season full of them, still sticks with Hightower years later. It's that fear of letting down his teammates that quietly drives him to chase perfection in his work—something that's yielded favorable results for the Patriots.

"That [Super Bowl] play with the Seahawks, when that came up. Everyone in the stadium knew what play it was. I think they ran it about eight or nine times. ... I knew if I didn't make the tackle, it wasn't going to be anyone else's fault but mine. I knew the game would be over, and there was no way we were coming back from that. I was trying to make sure that it wasn't going to be my fault that we lost."

A comparable desire to shoulder the load carries over to Hightower's charity work, where he's hustling to raise money for the American Diabetes Association. It's a cause that's close to Hightower: His mother, L'Tanya, was diagnosed with diabetes in 2015, sparking him to get involved. He's held Monday Night Football watch parties and also hosted a Wonder Woman screening this summer to benefit a group of women impacted by diabetes. His efforts landed him Sports Spectacular's Spirit Award this April in a Los Angeles ceremony.



"Whenever I started doing this, I wasn't trying to start something crazy and make it bigger than what it is. But it grew into something much more, and a lot of people appreciate it here," Hightower says of his diabetes-awareness efforts, which will include his third annual Monday Night Football Watch Party on Sept. 25. "We've had a lot of success in the past couple of years, and that motivates me to want to do more and give back more and do a little bit more each year."

That sense of off-field comfort that Hightower has developed in New England weighed in the Patriots' favor when he was a free agent this March. "It wasn't just the way the money went," Hightower says. "I've been here for a while, and at the end of the day, the better go-to for me was to come back."

> "WE'VE HAD A LOT OF SUCCESS IN THE PAST COUPLE OF YEARS, AND THAT MOTIVATES ME TO WANT TO DO MORE AND GIVE BACK MORE AND DO A LITTLE BIT MORE EACH YEAR."

Hightower's found a home in New England, rising to the challenge in the team's biggest moments and more than happy to leave the hubbub behind when the game ends. In an organization that's bursting with superstars, one of the most important players to its success has settled in under the radar.

"I wasn't really a fan favorite during college and I'm not too worried about being a fan favorite now. I love my teammates and I love what fans I do have," Hightower says. "I've never really cared about being liked. I don't need the Jules or the Tom or the Gronk attention. I'm OK being me." ◆

2017 PATRIOTS SEASON PREVIEW

LIGHTNING RODS

BY EZRA DYER

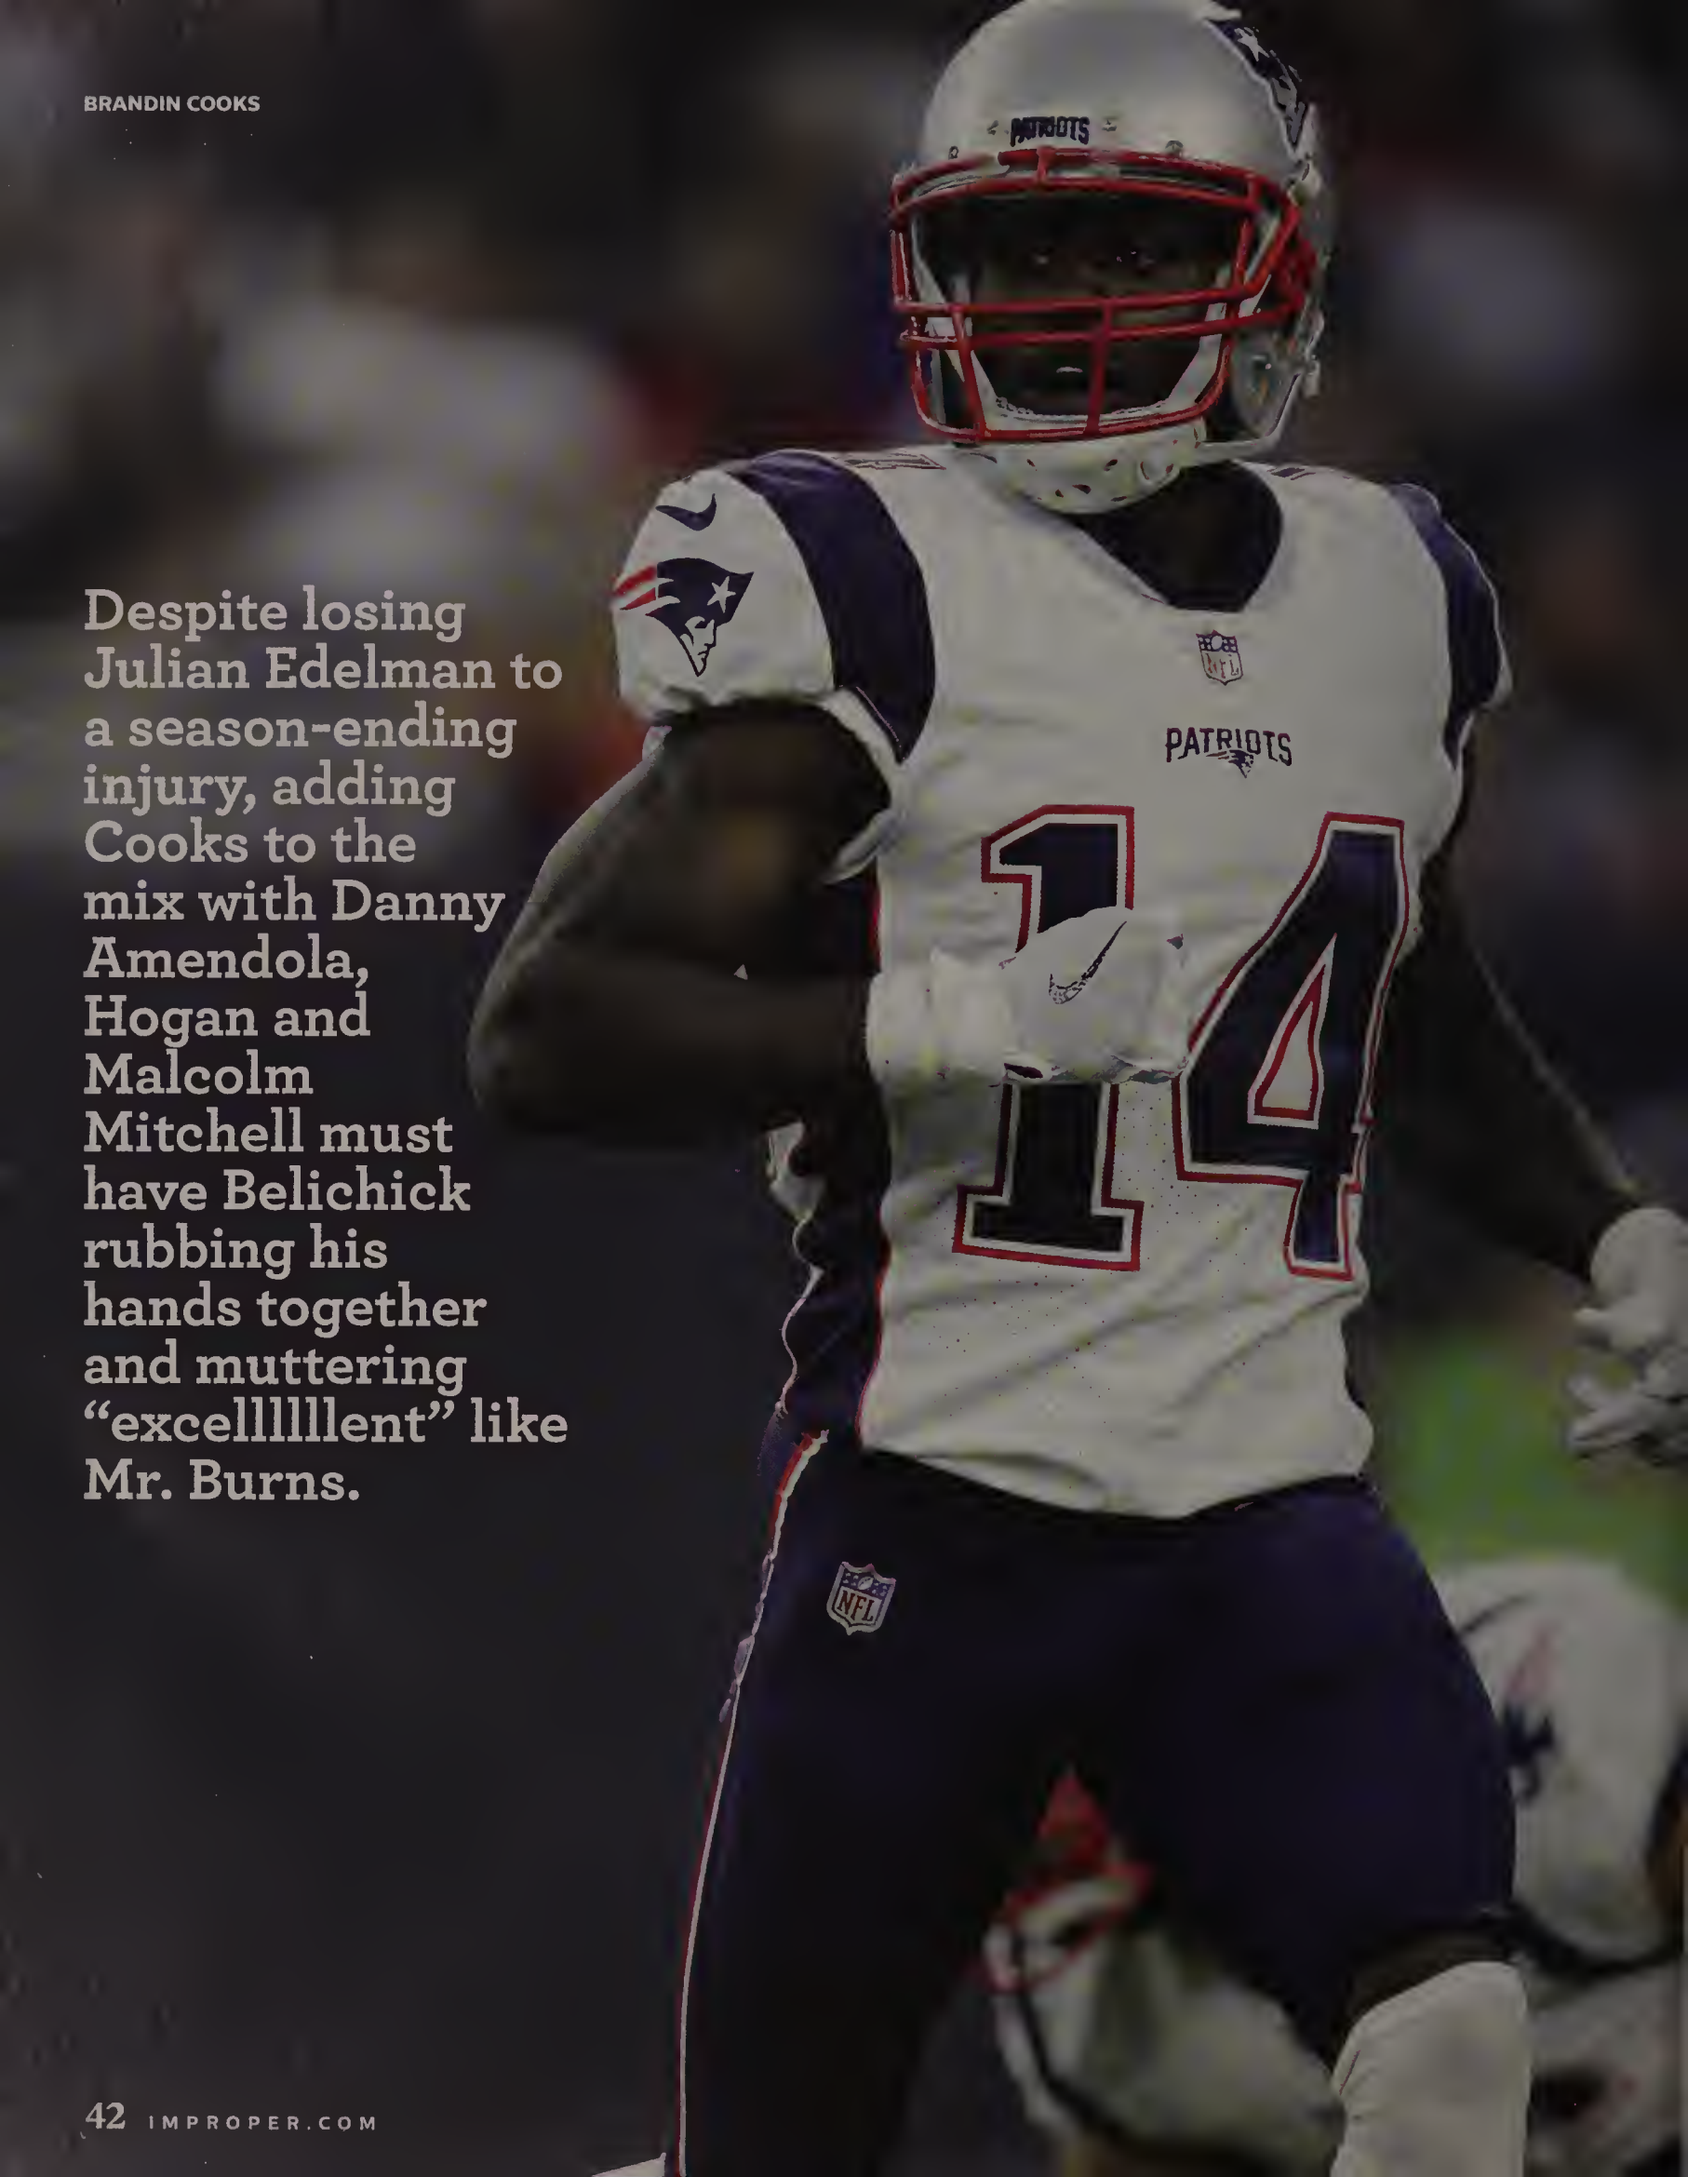
THE NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS



One day in February, I found myself picking up a car at a cavernous storage facility outside Atlanta. This was a few days after the Super Bowl, and inside that garage was the parade that never happened—rows of Mercedes-Benz models emblazoned with Atlanta Falcons world championship decals, ready to go. Even as a Patriots fan, someone aligned with the pitiless vanquishing horde from Foxboro, I felt sad for a moment. Poor Falcons fans. They'll never see these cars, this alternate vision of joy and happiness that was snatched away at the final moment in the most heart-wrenching way possible. A light cloud of empathic gloom enveloped me.

And then the moment passed, and I threw my head back and laughed the diabolical laugh of a supervillain with a freeze ray pointed at the U.N., because that's what the Patriots are to the NFL. Not to belabor the very recent football past, but let's relive the afterglow of Super Bowl LI for just a minute.

It's the third quarter, the score is 28-3 and the Patriots have been thoroughly dominated. Those of us watching the game are already rationalizing—well, two years ago Lynch didn't run, and Butler made the pick, and we kind of stole that one at the last moment, and that sort of lightning doesn't strike twice. Except that it does, and the second time isn't just lightning, but an electromagnetic pulse that disables all of the Falcons offense, triggers 31 unanswered Patriots points, and leads to the first overtime victory in Super Bowl history. The rest of the country may hate New England, but you can't say the Patriots don't bring the entertainment when it comes to Super Bowls.

Most teams have a hard time winning one Super Bowl.

Two wins is statistically improbable, the relentless strain of the salary cap casting stars to the wind and forcing the kind of compromises that undermine postseason drives. Maybe you have a great O-line but a suspect secondary. Maybe you have a top-five wide receiver but a bottom-20 tight end. Maybe you've got Jay Ajayi but also Jay Cutler. That's the way it works—for everyone but the Patriots. Because last year the Pats won the Super Bowl for the fifth time, and this year they're even better. How so? Let's take a look.

Despite losing Julian Edelman to a season-ending injury, adding Cooks to the mix with Danny Amendola, Hogan and Malcolm Mitchell must have Belichick rubbing his hands together and muttering "excellllllent" like Mr. Burns.

STEPHON GILMORE

40 AND LOVIN' IT

Last year, generic-guy-in-a-suit Roger Goodell bequeathed the Patriots with a wonderful gift. While every other healthy NFL quarterback had to play 16 regular season games, Tom Brady only had to play 12! This hardly seemed fair to the rest of the league, but that's the way it works for the Patriots—always getting special treatment. Thanks to that monthlong vacation, Brady was so well rested that he eventually broke a bunch of Super Bowl records for passing. And why not? It was only his 15th game of the season.

Brady is 40 now, so should we be worried? Historically, he probably doesn't have a lot of time left in his career. He's already the second-oldest quarterback to win a Super Bowl, behind Peyton Manning, who is only 69 weeks older but seems like he belongs in a black-and-white photo wearing a leather helmet. Even among pocket quarterbacks, you just don't see anyone deep in their 40s taking snaps. There are no Tim Wakefields in football.

There have been 14 40-year-old starting QBs in the NFL. But fewer than half made it to 41, and after that it's a select club. Hey, maybe Brady will be like Hall of-Famer George Blanda, who played quarterback (and... kicker?) for the '75 Raiders at age 48. Tom's been eating that magic vegan Gisele food that gives you the telomeres of a teenager, so who knows what his limit is. All we can say is: If he plays like he did last year, that'll do. And if he needs a game or two to rest his weary Gen-X bones and kick back to listen to some Spacehog, last year's 3-1 start proved that the rest of the team can generally hold it together until he gets back. In fact, hey, Goodell: We saw Tom Brady spiking his kombucha with ginkgo biloba and his cleats are made of Flubber. You should suspend him for a few early games.

NOT TOO MANY COOKS

The Patriots traded the Saints' first- and third-round draft picks in exchange for Brandin Cooks and a fourth-round pick. Fair enough! Last year, 15 of Cooks' catches went for more than 20 yards, and six of them went for more than 40. For perspective, Randy Moss' 2007 stats: 18 catches of more than 20 yards, nine of more than 40. Could Cooks, who is only 23, hit those kinds of numbers and become a Moss-like deep threat on the Pats offense? It sure seems like a distinct possibility. And a player like that helps everyone else. Early in a preseason practice against the Jaguars, Cooks burned everyone for a 65-yard catch. On the next play, the safety cheated toward Cooks and Chris Hogan caught a 40-yard pass on the other side. This is the kind of thing that'll happen all year, we hope. Despite losing Julian Edelman to a season-ending injury, adding Cooks to the mix with Danny Amendola, Hogan and Malcolm Mitchell must have Belichick rubbing his hands together and muttering "excellllllent" like Mr. Burns. We mean, more often than he normally does.

As an added bonus, Cooks doesn't appear to suffer from Crazy Star Wide Receiver Syndrome. He hasn't flashed a busload of nuns or accidentally shot himself with a crossbow or legally changed his name to Pap Smear. Kind of makes us wonder if he's even any good.

RB BY COMMITTEE, OR RB BY GILLISLEE?

Last year, LeGarrette Blount ran for 1,161 yards and led the league with 18 touchdowns. The question is: How much of that was Blount being a beast, and how much of it was a function of the Patriots offense and its general excellence? After all, a strong passing game begets a strong running game. And the difference between Pats Blount and sticks-and-seeds Philly Blount is stark—he went straight from leading the league in TDs to having Eagles fans debating whether he should even be on the roster. Sure, Blount's at the age when running backs commence drastic physical decline, but that's an awfully harsh season-to-season transition, and one that suggests that the Pats system is more important than the particular player taking the handoffs. We could probably suit up Jim Nance and have him go for 800 yards and 10 TDs.

MALCOLM BUTLER

Which brings us to Mike Gillislee. A more conventionally sized running back (around 220 pounds), Gillislee looks like a classic Pats acquisition, a backup who was stuck behind a superstar but showed flashes of excellence when given a chance. Last year with the Bills, Gillislee started the Week 8 game against the Patriots when LeSean McCoy was out, and in that game he ran for 85 yards and a touchdown. Evidently, Mr. Belichick took notice.

Given the number of weapons on the Patriots offense—including the crowded RB depth chart—it's hard to say where Gillislee fits in. But let's at least pencil in, "Laurence Maroney on a good day."

HAPPY, GILMORE?

Speaking of former Buffalo Bills, the Pats made a big defensive acquisition by picking up Pro Bowl cornerback Stephon Gilmore. There's no doubt that Gilmore has major talent, notching 48 tackles and five interceptions last year. But he is, uh, quite competitive. Like, "administer an on-field beating to your teammate" competitive. Yes, Gilmore kicked off his Patriots season by engaging in a helmets-off fracas with Julian Edelman during a practice, later explaining that he has "no friends" on the field. Hey, the same thing once happened with Rodney Harrison and Troy Brown, and those fellas worked it out.

THE BACKUP WHO WILL BE A STARTER

Meet Dwayne Allen. He's the Patriots' starting tight end. No, not right now. But at some point in the season, Rob Gronkowski—whose play often violates the law of conservation of energy—will run full-speed into an ill-placed cotton-candy vendor on the sidelines, coating the first three rows in an explosion of blue raspberry flavoring and costing himself three games with a sprained frontalis muscle. That's why former Indianapolis Colt Dwayne Allen is more important than your average backup tight end.

Now, Allen is not going to form a two-headed TE monster with Gronk, like a certain guy we'd rather forget (no, not Martellus Bennett). But Allen caught six TDs last year for the Colts. He could be a booster on the Patriots rocketship, assuming he learns the offense, which he's described as "extremely hard." Hey, Gronk learned it. We assume.

OK, THERE IS THIS ONE PROBLEM

Two wonderful adjectives can be applied to our defense: "Super Bowl-winning" and "familiar." The 2017 D looks similar to the 2016 edition, with Dont'a Hightower, Patrick Chung, Devin McCourty, Malcolm Butler and Trey Flowers among the key players returning. But there is a notable absence: Rob Ninkovich, who retired at the start of training camp, costing the defense an edge rusher. The Pats surely knew this was possible, so they used their top draft pick on defensive end Derek Rivers, who promptly blew an ACL in about the first 10 seconds of practice. And they traded with the Carolina Panthers for Kony Ealy, who they cut in August. So who does that leave them with? Maybe Geneo Grissom, maybe somebody we don't even know about yet. The main thing to remember is that the fretting is probably overblown. Ninkovich was great, but last year he had four sacks. Somebody will step up and fill that role, because that's what happens with the Patriots.

SO, 19-0?

Yes, there are still some questions. Will they draw up a play wherein fullback Glenn Gronkowski throws a halfback option pass to Rob in an all-Gronk touchdown play? Will identical twins Jacob and Cody Hollister switch uniforms and concoct Double Trouble pranks to confuse the Gronkowski brothers? What percent of bearded New England men will wear a backward hat with a pencil in it as a last-minute Matt Patricia Halloween costume? (Answer: 98 percent.) Will Robert Mueller investigate Putin stealing Kraft's ring and Kraft subsequently giving a ring to Trump? And will Pride of BC Matt Ryan make any more Gatorade commercials about how losing makes you extra-motivated? Because that was hilarious. He must be super-motivated at this point.

For Patriots fans, the default preseason mode is to obsess over perceived deficiencies and then totally give up if the team has two losses by October. But after what happened in February, we're bathing in optimism. This year feels a lot like 2007. There is open talk about 19-0. So let's remember the lesson from a decade ago, which is that cockiness can be its own lethal problem. Maybe the best thing for the Pats would be to lose the season opener. But if they manage to reach mid-November undefeated, let's all remember that mouth-breather Eli Manning could show up in the Super Bowl and drool his way to a 21-0 lead. In which case, we'll have him right where we want him.

Hot Take

A sonic takeover on Tremont Street

THE BOCH WANG Theatre's stage has been graced by many acclaimed performers—but that tends to be where they stay. Local music agency Lysten Boston is inviting artists to step off the stage and into the Wang's gilded lobby for the Tremont Takeover, for which it tapped a handful of other local outlets, including Boston Hassle, Mmmmaven and Allston Pudding, to help curate a one-of-a-kind show to represent the city's diverse music scene. The talent taking over Tremont Street for the inaugural event includes hip-hop darling Dutch RcBelle, metal rockers Gozu, prolific DJ Coralcola and more. The sonic party is set to feature a photo booth, giveaways and swag from participating partners including Vanyaland and the Boch Center, so let loose in the lobby on Sept. 16.

DEAR DIARY German director G.W. Pabst turned heads with his 1929 film Pandora's Box starring Louise Brooks, and the pair quickly teamed up for his next film, Diary of a Lost Girl. In this adaptation of Margarete Böhme's novel, Brooks stars as Thymian, the daughter of a philandering pharmacist. Unexpectedly pregnant after being seduced by her father's assistant, Thymian is shipped off to a stifling reformatory for wayward girls, only to escape to a high-end brothel. She chronicles everything in a leather-bound diary, including her moral resilience and eventual rise in society. See the 1920s silver-screen siren in the digitally restored film at the Brattle Theatre on Sept. 6-7. / Cathryn Haight

Crown Heights ★★★ Despite never quite nailing a consistent point of view, writer/director Matt Ruskin's Sundance Audience Award-winning drama is nevertheless a good movie. But given its subject, it should have been great. The movie tells the real-life story of the systematic injustice perpetrated on Colin Warner (Get Out's Lakeith Stanfield), an 18-year-old Brooklyn man who spent more than 20 years behind bars after he was wrongfully convicted of murder. In the spring of 1980, the small-time car thief was arrested on what he presumed would be a grand theft auto charge, but it didn't take long for the harsh reality of his situation to surface. It didn't matter that the frightened young teenage witness (Skylan Brooks from Netflix's The Get Down), who was coerced by police into randomly picking out Colin's picture from a book of mugshots, recanted his testimony while on the stand. Colin was sentenced to a term of 15 years to life, with an early release only possible if he demonstrated remorse for a crime he didn't commit. Rapidly skipping through the years, Ruskin shifts his focus onto Colin's childhood pal Carl "KC" King (former Oakland Raider Nnamdi Asomugha), who devoted his life to fighting for the release of his innocent friend, as well as Antoinette (Natalie Paul), Colin's childhood crush. With racial inequality in the spotlight, Ruskin's uneven film is a potent reminder of how much still needs to be done. (At Boston Common.)

Detroit ★★★1/2 One of the finest films in theaters right now is a historical drama based on events not widely known to the American public, one set in a burning war zone where the young men whose lives hang in the balance have little hope for escape. No, I'm not talking about Christopher Nolan's Dunkirk, but Kathryn Bigelow's Detroit, which finds the Oscar-winning director of 2009's The Hurt Locker once again collaborating with journalist Mark Boal, the Academy Award-winning screenwriter behind both that film and Bigelow's 2013 triumph, Zero Dark Thirty. Their latest work centers on a horrifying incident of police brutality that transpired on a hot summer evening in 1967 during a week of civil unrest spawned from a Motor City police raid on an after-hours club. Two nights after the uprising began, a report of sniper fire sent the National Guard and police toward the Algiers Motel, which had been a refuge from the violence but would become the site of a massacre. After riddling the building with bullets, law enforcement rounded up the terrified—and innocent—suspects who were holed up inside, doling out frontier justice to a group of young black men and the two young white women who had the audacity to be enjoying the night with them. In February, Jordan Peele's Get Out offered an explosive critique of racism, but his scares were tempered with laughs; Bigelow offers no such release. Sadly, the type of horrors she's unflinchingly put on display here are as familiar today as they were 50 years ago. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Dunkirk ★★★ Pity poor Tom Hardy. After appearing as Bane in Christopher Nolan's The Dark Knight Rises, and now as an air-mask-wearing RAF fighter pilot in the writer/director's latest, a fictionalized re-creation of 1940's Dunkirk evacuation, it's easy to joke that the British-born actor is destined to have his mouth muzzled nearly every time he appears in one of Nolan's large-scale epics. And large-scale, Dunkirk most certainly is. As such, be sure to see it on film at one of the three local venues projecting it in the 70mm format: the AMC Loews Boston Common, the Coolidge Corner Theatre and the Somerville Theatre in Davis Square. Or, if you're willing to go the extra mile to experience the movie in its best possible format—70mm IMAX—your nearest option is in Providence. Now, if you're asking yourself why I'm focusing so much on the visual presentation of the film, simply put, the visuals are this picture's raison d'être. In fact, Nolan shows very little interest in developing backstories for his characters—you'll be hard-pressed to remember many of their names. So here's a cheat sheet: Mark Rylance plays Mr. Dawson, the civilian captain of a small pleasure yacht who's determined to help get the shellshocked British soldiers off of Dunkirk's beach, where they're sitting ducks for a German air attack. Combating this threat from above is Farrier (Hardy), while newcomer Fionn Whitehead plays Tommy, the grunt we follow for most of the film's fractured chronology, which practically begs a second viewing to piece it all together. Choose your theater wisely. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Good Time ★★★★ Returning with their third triumph after 2009's Daddy Longlegs and 2014's Heaven Knows What, Boston University graduates Josh and Benny Safdie have created what's easily their most accessible film yet, a grungy little movie that manages to locate all of the grit and grime that used to be on display so gloriously in the New York-set cinema of the 1970s. Gorgeously shot on 35mm film by cinematographer Sean Price Williams, this uproariously funny crime drama also explicitly owes a debt to its forebear from a later decade, After Hours, Martin Scorsese's 1985 comic classic that, like this film, spans a single, fast-paced night on the mean streets of Manhattan. After involving his developmentally and hearing-disabled brother Nick (co-director Benny Safdie) in a botched bank robbery, Connie Nikas (a wonderful Robert Pattinson) embarks on a crazed overnight odyssey to spring Nick from jail. Along the way, he picks up a few unwitting accomplices, including sometime girlfriend Corey (Jennifer Jason Leigh), underaged Crystal (Taliah Lennice Webster in an incredibly assured, naturalistic debut) and recently released ex-con Ray (Heaven Knows What's Buddy Duress), all backed by a hypnotic electronic score by Wayland native Daniel Lopatin (also known as Oneohtrix Point Never). It's grubby good fun that packs an emotional wallop. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

I Do... Until I Don't ★★ If you had the good fortune of catching the limited run of 2013's In a World..., the writing/directing debut of actress Lake Bell, then the idea of a second feature written and directed by this solid supporting player (so good in What Happens in Vegas, It's Complicated and No Strings Attached) seemed promising. Or at least it was...until it wasn't. A title with an ellipsis felt fresh the first time, but like many of the ideas in this follow-up, it's long since passed its sell-by date. Bell is still writing from an insider's view of the film industry, but the movie-within-a-movie gimmick she employs in I Do... Until I Don't isn't nearly as novel or interesting as her earlier look at the competitive profession of movie-trailer voiceover artists. While she was able to attract a nice lineup of character actors to play couples struggling through marriage (Paul Reiser and Mary Steenburgen, Wyatt Cenac and Amber Heard, and Ed Helms opposite Bell herself), she mostly strands them in a fairly uninspiring premise. British actress Dolly Wells plays an uptight documentary filmmaker willing to bribe and coerce her subjects to prove her thesis that marriage is dead, even if that means destroying their lives. And yes, the results are about as unfunny as it sounds. Still, the actors do have notable chemistry with each other, giving the more dramatic moments a bit of heft. But while Bell lights up the screen with her smile, her sophomore effort feels like little more than an ellipsis... (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

An Inconvenient Sequel: Truth to Power ★★1/2 More than a decade after director Davis Guggenheim's glorified PowerPoint presentation (the Al Gore-led global warming documentary, An Inconvenient Truth), Bonni Cohen and Jon Shenk have broken free of the lecture hall format, getting the grayer and thicker Gore out for some needed exercise in this follow-up. Training their cameras on the "recovering politician" as he travels the globe, they capture Gore walking on crumbling glaciers, meeting with world leaders and, yes, inspiring future activists with his well-oiled presentation, which has moved past its slideshow origins. There's now ample footage of natural disasters that can be pinned on climate change, and sadly, as Gore demonstrates with his video clips, some of the predictions that critics scoffed at in Guggenheim's picture have come to pass, like the flooding of the World Trade Center memorial site. Cohen and Shenk probably spend a bit too much time creating a hagiography for Gore, pausing frequently as admirers stop to tell him how much they wish he'd been elected president. But they find their footing as they sprint toward a climax at the 2015 Paris Climate Summit, the results of which should end the movie on a high note. Alas, an unexpected storm cloud in the form of President Trump looms over the film, threatening the climate accord that so many fought for. As truths go, they don't get much more inconvenient. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Logan Lucky ★★★1/2 Oscar-winning director Steven Soderbergh returns to the big screen after a 4-year "retirement" with this comic thriller. Focused on a family of economically challenged West Virginians who attempt to change their luck with an absurd plan to rob North Carolina's Charlotte Motor Speedway during the Coca-Cola 600, the film may share some obvious parallels with Soderbergh's Ocean's Eleven and its two sequels. However, its DNA more closely resembles Magic Mike, the director's fictionalized look at actor Channing Tatum's early days making ends meet as a male stripper. First-time screenwriter Rebecca Blunt (reportedly Soderbergh's wife, entertainment reporter Jules Asner) shares Soderbergh's interest in exploring how a post-recession world has driven good people to do things they may not have otherwise considered, and she actually wrote the role of former construction worker Jimmy Logan with Alabama native Tatum in mind. Laid off due to a pre-existing condition, the divorced dad enlists the aid of his brother and sister—one-handed bartender Clyde (Adam Driver) and car-obsessed hairdresser Mellie (Riley Keough)—along with outside help from a demolition expert, appropriately named Joe Bang. There's just one problem: Joe is currently incarcerated. He's also played by a platinum-haired, heavily tattooed, Southern-twanged Daniel Craig, whose explosive lunacy serves as a reminder of how strong a character actor he was before he became synonymous with James Bond. This film is breezy fun and a welcome return for Soderbergh. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Patti Cake$ ★★★ While few have been begging for a distaff version of 8 Mile, debuting writer/director Geremy Jasper hustles and flows pretty hard to convince you that you have been. Certainly, it helps that the New Jersey native found a star in his female lead, Australian powerhouse Danielle Macdonald. She not only delivers a solid Jersey accent, but her rapping isn't half bad either—particularly since she'd never engaged in any freestyling before being cast as aspiring rapper Patti Dombrowski, also known as Patti Cake$. But while Macdonald gives a hugely sympathetic performance as the dreamer who's been unkindly dubbed "Dumbo" since middle school, Jasper doesn't do himself many favors by also including every other cliche in the book. There's the drunken, unsupportive parent still bitter about her own failed musical ambitions (Bridget Everett), the dismissive local rap titan (Sahr Ngaujah), the nerdy best friend who fuels her ambitions (Siddharth Dhananjay), the quiet loner and possible love interest (Mamoudou Athie) and the loving, raspy-voiced grandma who doesn't have long to live (Raging Bull's Cathy Moriarty). If you're worried that Jasper might show an ounce of restraint, he also borrows from the Rocky playbook. Despite these familiar notes—or maybe because of them—he's nevertheless created a rousing crowd-pleaser, complete with a "Lose Yourself"-like anthem that Patti performs during a climactic talent competition. Like Patti herself, the film is an underdog that you'll want to root for. (At Boston Common and Coolidge Corner.)

The Trip to Spain ★★★ At the outset of Michael Winterbottom's The Trip to Italy, sharp-witted co-stars and comedians Steve Coogan and Rob Brydon self-consciously bantered back-and-forth about how sequels are rarely as good as the originals, a nod to the fact that this 2014 comedy about two British men talking over six meals through six different Italian locations was itself a sequel to The Trip, Winterbottom's 2010 original that found the duo dining at six locations throughout northern England. Now in their third go-round, The Trip to Spain, Coogan and Brydon discuss the diminishing returns offered by trilogies, and you laugh along with them as they share six more meals in, yes, Spain. But the simple fact is that these two old friends, playing fictionalized versions of themselves, are just as funny and interesting as they were at the start of these films, which are actually condensed versions of three separate, six-episode series made by Winterbottom for the BBC—more of a buffet than a six-course dinner, if you will. Beyond the sumptuously photographed, hunger-inducing food, a large part of the appeal of this endeavor derives from the endless string of dueling celebrity impressions that "Steve Coogan" and "Rob Brydon" engage in as they eat, from Mick Jagger to David Bowie and from Sean Connery to fan favorite Michael Caine. Like an old married couple, these two have mastered the art of the put-down (especially if an impression fails to measure up), good-naturedly ribbing each other as they face their mortality over food. Here's to the next trip! (At Kendall Square.)

STARBOY Whatever his secret, it's working for the Weeknd. And these days, the Weeknd is working overtime. The unlikely rise of the breakout pop/R&B sensation (also known as Canada's Abel Makkonen Tesfaye) began when he broke onto the scene as a mysterious figure, releasing a handful of avant-garde demos to YouTube—and Rick Rolling them into friends' social inboxes—where they quickly gained traction among a hipster R&B set. Fast-forward a few years and the Weeknd, since shorn of his signature peacock dreads, is a megastar. He's scoring back-to-back No. 1 hits with "The Hills" and "Can't Feel My Face," dating models and blowing off the VMAs. But that air of sexed-up mystery remains, which is why we're working for Sept. 12, when the Weeknd headlines TD Garden. / Alexandra Cavallo

OH, THE HORROR

Things are getting creepy at the Peabody Essex Museum, where there's some 130 vintage, ghoulish works on display in exhibit It's Alive!, courtesy of Metallica's Kirk Hammett. The lead guitarist has been a poster child since the age of 5, when scary flicks like the mutant plant-infested The Day of the Triffids first attracted him. Now, his decades-in-the-making collection is on display for the first time in a museum, gathering 75 posters from 20th-century films, including one Frankenstein design uncovered in a Midwest movie theater's projection booth that's the last surviving version. Then there's Hammett's spooky masks, toys and guitars that also fill the Salem haunt, which is under paranormal circumstances through Nov. 26. / Sarah Hagman

FUEL TO THE FLAME

Everything is planned and perfeet in Shaker Heights, an idyllie suburb of Cleveland, and no family embodies this orderly spirit more than the Riehardsons. But Celeste Ng's Little Fires Everywhere is a portrait of Ameriean suburbia interrupted, and her novel soon shows the eracks that ean riddle even the most utopian settings. When artist Mia Warren and her daughter Pearl beeome tenants in the family's rental home, the Richardsons are captivated by the mysterious pair. The duo's enigmatie nature espeeially intrigues the Riehardson's matriareh, Elena, who beeomes obsessed with uneovering the seerets from Mia's dark past. THE ROSÉ DIET

WHAT I DID ON MY SUMMER VACATION

THE SUMMER WHEN I WAS 12, MY father, who was a permissive, Peter Pan type and a Disneyland-divorced Dad, rented a cottage in Bermuda for three weeks. It was the first time I went scuba diving, the first time I hung out in a pub, the first (and only) time I snuck onto a cruise ship to watch a movie, and the first (but not the last) time I discovered that rum swizzles and sailing go swimmingly together, but only to a certain point.

When I returned this summer, via a super-convenient direct flight on JetBlue, I found much was the same, but much had changed. Trimingham's, established in 1842 and the island's mecca for preppy clothing throughout my childhood, is no longer in business, and the comical-looking cop in Bermuda shorts and tall dark socks, directing traffic at the roundabout, is a thing of the past. There's more development, but none of what I saw was an eyesore, and some of it is a vast improvement, like the newly refurbished Hamilton Princess.

I remember the dowager empress of Bermuda's grand old hotels having a certain musty, colonial charm back in the day, but the chintz upholstery was faded and a semi-tropical torpor had taken hold. Fast-forward to now, when it's undergone an epic face-lift of tasteful proportions.

To begin with, there's the art—a collection of contemporary works that includes artists like Banksy, Shepard Fairey and Damien Hirst. There's a giant sculpture of a mouse-like figure by KAWS that dominates the terrace, while one of the men's rooms even has a Julian Opie hanging over the toilet.

The first order of business was to stock my room with necessities (vodka and rosé), but the trip to Miles Market also helped me to avoid a major tragedy back at home. As a proud gay man (and something of an Anglophile), I have made it a point to never have any dishwashing liquid in my kitchen other than the British brand, Fairy (by appointment to Her Majesty the Queen, although I doubt she does her own dishes). A few months earlier, my husband, Sam, had pointed out that we were down to our last bottle, but Bermuda's British sensibility saved the day; I stocked up like a hoarder at a dollar store. Crisis averted, I ambled over to the Waterfront Complex for dinner at Harry's Bar, a restaurant with extraordinary food and an even more extraordinary urinal, shaped like a giant white flower, in the men's room. (I swear I don't have a fixation on men's rooms.)

The Hamilton Princess' Beach Club, a 20-minute jitney ride from the hotel, is located on the unfortunately named Sinky Bay, but it boasts a perfect crescent of beach facing a well-protected cove of gorgeous turquoise water. It also stocks enough cold rosé to keep a drunkard like me satisfied. Between reading my book, floating around like a colossal, bloated pool toy, and pausing to devour the most delicious wahoo tacos I've ever tasted, I had my hands full. Nevertheless, when friends texted me to meet them for drinks at the Coral Beach & Tennis Club, I agreed. The only problem: the club's dress code requires a collared shirt, so my friends had their son, whom I had last seen as a toddler, meet me out front to lend me one. Being confronted by a strapping young man two inches taller than me and with a thicker beard made me feel unspeakably old, but a few Goslings on the rocks quickly erased the pain.

Back at the Hamilton, I was eager to sample the fried chicken—unquestionably my favorite food—at Marcus', the hotel's restaurant and brainchild of celebrity chef Marcus Samuelsson. The dish lived up to the hype, as did the massage I received at the hotel's Exhale Spa.

The rest of my vacation unfolded in a similar manner: beach, drink, eat, beach, eat, drink, with the exception of an afternoon I spent in the pool at a friend's house. That's why it was heartening to learn that, according to the digital scale in my bathroom, I was 6 ounces lighter when I checked out than when I arrived.

So thanks for a lovely time, Bermuda. Now I just need to find a publisher for my diet book, Rosé All Day. ◆

AMADEUS LIVE

IT'S PART CONCERT, PART FILM, AND ALL PARTS EPIC.

Winner of eight Academy Awards, Amadeus is universally acclaimed as the best movie about classical music ever made. With the brilliant musical soundtrack performed live on period instruments—the kind Mozart himself knew and wrote for—as the sumptuous film is projected on a vast HD screen, you'll experience this masterpiece of sight, sound and epic movie-making with new authenticity and power.

A FULL SLATE

JENNY SLATE HAS BEEN VERY BUSY. The Milton native has nearly a dozen IMDb credits in 2017, ranging from main roles to voice-overs on feature films and TV shows. In an interview with Jonathan Soroff, she touches on her latest projects, and dishes on why she prefers dramatic roles to comedic ones. But Slate pledges she'll always have a soft spot for Marcel the Shell With Shoes On. The 2010 web video that helped put her on the map has a simple premise based on one little shell, one funny voice and one rich script. It's the type of ingenuity that can be found throughout our Fall Arts preview, which rounds up some of the must-see exhibits, concerts, plays and more across town. Whether you prefer Nintendo songs performed by an orchestra or an adaptation of a Jane Austen classic that's staged on wheels, there's something for everyone in the nearly 50 events we explore in our feature. And if you're looking for an even sweeter reason to read this issue, Sarah Hagman explores the world of Fluff, which is celebrating its 100th anniversary in Somerville. But don't get stuck on the white marshmallow—there's plenty of treats in all 104 pages.

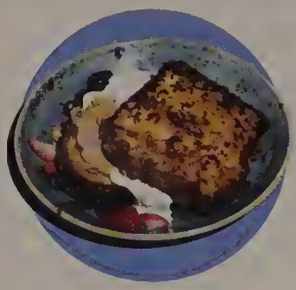
STICKY NOTES

SOMERVILLE'S OWN MARSHMALLOW FLUFF TURNS 100



H. ALLEN DURKEE (LEFT) AND FRED MOWER (RIGHT)

Get Stuffed on Fluff

When the annual What the Fluff Festival rolls into Union Square on Sept. 23, it's an extra-special occasion: This year the Somerville-bred gooey goodness celebrates its 100th anniversary since resident Archibald Query whipped up the mixture of sugar, corn syrup, dried egg whites and vanilla. A couple of fellas by the names of H. Allen Durkee and Fred Mower purchased the recipe in 1920 for $500, and the same families have been making the same recipe in the same town since the '50s, getting into the radio business and dreaming up Marshmallow Treats with Rice Krispies along the way. At this week's 12th installment of the festival, get in on everything from Fluff jousting to marshmallow tosses—or, get your sticky fix around town with some of these sips and snacks. / Sarah Hagman

Gather chef Dennis Wilson's Fluffernutter stuffed French toast ($15) stacks crunchy Frosted Flakes-crusted challah bread with layers of Fluff, and tops it all off with berries. And the brunch menu will soon feature another Fluff-centric addition with a new Waffle Sunday special.

At Gracie's Ice Cream, the signature Fluff cone is smothered in the marshmallowy treat before being torched, but the Fluff options at the Union Square shop don't end there. Fill up on flavors like Fluffernutterbutter, which packs Nutter Butter cookies and Fluff into peanut butter ice cream, or check out the new raspberry-flavored Pink and Fluffy.

The Gallows' lone dessert option holds its own. The Stoner's Delight ($8) trifle features a bruleed heap of bananas, peanut butter mousse, chocolate ganache and Fluff—a solid nightcap that owner Rebecca Roth Gullo calls the ultimate salty and sweet ending.

Hojoko blends two rums and pineapple for its frozen piña colada ($12) that's served in a frosted mug and topped with a torched 'mallow. Fluff's folded into the cocktail's coconut milk for a little extra sweetness, which pairs nicely with the spicy kick of the menu's tuna burger.

Rosebud American Kitchen & Bar pays tribute to its diner car past with Milkshake Monday specials, and one frequent suspect, the Fluffernutter ($13), returns to the lineup to celebrate the Fluff fest. The bourbon-spiked ice cream concoction includes Fluff and peanut butter and is trimmed with whipped cream and a mini sandwich.

JUPITER LANDS: Legend has it that William Blackstone rode a white bull named Jupiter into Boston in the 17th century

STRONG AS A BULL

A NEW TAVERN LOOKS TO THE PAST FOR ITS DESIGN

WHITE BULL TAVERN
1 Union St., Boston
thewhitebulltavern.com

THE FIRST THING CUSTOMERS WILL notice when they step inside the forthcoming White Bull Tavern is not one particular decor piece, but rather an interior design that stuffs history into nearly every nook of the space.

"I did not want a cookie-cutter restaurant. I want somebody to notice something different every time they come in," says owner Jeff Baird, who also owns the Blackstone Grill (soon to change its name to the Blackstone Pub). "We're not trying to recreate history because we're at the end of a street with the Bell in Hand and Union Oyster House. But we're trying to come up with something that ties into the street and the area."

The downstairs includes more than a dozen types of wallpaper, an open kitchen with a gold-foiled pizza oven meant to evoke the State House and a portrait of William Blackstone hanging on one wall. Upstairs, interior designer Dave O covered all of the walls with pages from 186 old books, sketching keyboards, spinning wheels and other objects over some of them. One table is made from an old Singer sewing machine, while others have custom tops with keyhole images of chairs painted on them. The actual chairs have a background, too—some were bought at the Topsfield Fair, while others were sourced from a Vermont barn and are more than 100 years old. Above the staircase bridging the two levels, a white bull hangs as a nod to the tavern's name.

"We're on the Blackstone block, which is named after William Blackstone, who was the first European settler in Boston," Baird says. "He was granted land that became the Boston Common, but he eventually moved to Rhode Island. At the age of 65, he rode back into Boston on a white bull to reclaim his land."

While the history surrounding the tavern (slated to open in early- to mid-October) might surprise some customers, they'll find some familiarity on a menu that's expected to include a lot of tavern staples such as a large selection of pizzas and salads as well as wings and lamb chops. Lobster pie and other New England classics will also fill the menu, in addition to a weekly rotating entree such as prime rib. Twenty-four beers will be on draft, and cocktails will be served in creative vessels such as teacups and even a briefcase. Falling in line with the rest of the late-night options in the area, a DJ will take over the top floor nightly for dancing, pumping beats through a system that cost Baird more than $100,000.

"It has to be a three-dimensional place," Baird says of White Bull, which will have a capacity of 350, with seating for 180. "We're going after a lunch crowd, an after-work crowd and the dance crowd."

BIG FRY: Renegade's Pub loads its fries up with generous toppings.

Good Eats: Fired Up

Sound the alarm: The Engine 56 fries at the new Renegade's Pub in Eastie, which opened in mid-May in the vacant space that housed the old Victory Pub, pack some heat. And aptly so, as they're named for the longstanding Engine 56 firehouse down the road. The heaping pile of fries comes topped with generous chunks of smoked bacon, fried jalapenos, the pub's signature Renegade sauce and blue cheese from Marion's Great Hill Dairy Farm. As for what's in that tangy house-made sauce, the recipe is staying a secret. But, "One thing I will say is there's no ketchup in it," says partner Greg Weinstock. / Alexandra Cavallo

A REAL PRO: Sarah Kunst, founder of Proday, speaks at the Forbes Under 30 Summit.

Every day is different for Proday founder and CEO Sarah Kunst. In 2015, she made the Forbes 30 Under 30 list and in the same year launched her own sports media company with investors ranging from the Los Angeles Dodgers to Draft Kings CEO Jason Robins. Kunst is a featured speaker at this year's Forbes Under 30 Summit, which returns to Boston for a second year on Oct. 1–4. We caught up with Kunst, who shared more about life as a founder and CEO, her experience as a woman in the tech startup world and why she's excited about coming to Boston. / Emily Turner

WHAT'S THE MISSION OF YOUR COMPANY PRODAY? IS BEING AN ENTREPRENEUR SOMETHING YOU'VE ALWAYS CONSIDERED? Proday is a sports media company that shows what athletes do off the court. We cover their fitness, nutrition, style, culture and politics. I worked in digital media and as an investor for years before launching Proday and I love being an entrepreneur.

FOR THE PAST TWO YEARS YOU'VE WORKED AS A FOUNDER AND CEO, AND PRIOR TO THAT YOU WERE A VENTURE CAPITALIST. HOW HAS YOUR DAILY ROUTINE CHANGED IN THAT TIME? Being a founder means every day is different. I'm a bit like a firefighter, solving whatever emergency or opportunity is thrown my way. But I set daily, weekly and monthly goals to stay on track and grow the company. Being a VC means you spend most of your time helping people and connecting them. Being a founder means your sleeves are rolled up and you're working a lot more on a really wide variety of things, but it's so rewarding.

WHAT DO YOU PLAN TO ADDRESS AT THE FORBES UNDER 30 SUMMIT? I'm excited to speak several times at the summit about the importance of empathy in tech and what it's like for women in tech. These topics are hot-button in the industry, and I'm glad to be able to contribute.

WHAT HAS YOUR EXPERIENCE AS A WOMAN IN THE TECH STARTUP SPACE BEEN LIKE, AND HOW DOES THAT PLAY INTO YOUR ROLE NOW AS A FOUNDER AND CEO? Women running companies and investing means more money and higher returns, period. I'm excited to be a woman in tech because despite the challenges, I know that my company will be more successful because diversity drives returns.

ANY PLANS TO ENGAGE WITH BOSTON'S TECH COMMUNITY AND ENTREPRENEURS WHILE YOU'RE HERE? I'm excited to meet more people from Boston at the summit and I'm a big fan of Boston tech. Jason Robins, CEO of Draft Kings, is an investor in my company, and I really admire the Boston startup community.

ANY PLANS TO INCORPORATE MORE BOSTON PROFESSIONAL ATHLETES INTO THE APP AND YOUR COVERAGE? We write a lot about Boston athletes and teams and will continue to do so. It's one of the most loyal fan bases in the country [and has] some of the most amazing athletes. We also talk about the challenges many athletes have faced with racism in the Boston community and how they've worked to change the culture.

FORBES* UNDER 30 IS IN PART ABOUT LOOKING AHEAD TO THE FUTURE. IN YOUR IDEAL FUTURE, WHAT DO YOU SEE? I see more opportunities for women and minorities to fund, start and scale companies and organizations that will be the future of our world.

THE HILLTOP

PRICE: $13

INGREDIENTS: Tenure English vodka, Fords Gin, Cocchi Americano, beef broth, prickly pear syrup, lemon juice, Angostura and celery bitters

TASTE: A mix of sweet and savory, this "reversed James Bond martini" stars botanicals from a half ounce of London dry gin and makes use of an ounce and a half of a "rich flavored" vodka that has Brother Cleve's stamp of approval. "I'm not a big vodka guy," Cleve admits. "I used to DJ in Moscow a lot, and they have really good vodka—but they keep it there."

BEST BURGER BAR
195 Washington St
Brookline
(617-505-5320)
bestburgerbar.com

BACKGROUND: Best Burger Bar, which opened last month, serves this nod to the bygone Hilltop (and its neon cactus by incorporating prickly pear), which Cleve frequented with his family as a kid and later at company bashes for Stereo Jack's, Cambridge's used record store.

ELSEWHERE: Cleve fills the menu with his takes on old-school drinks that were staples of steakhouses, down to the once ubiquitous plastic stirrers. "I like classic cocktails, always have," explains the local bartending legend. "Those were the first things I learned how to make back in the '80s, when I was investigating all these old drinks that had pretty much disappeared from the planet, except at these old steakhouses." At BBB, he gets around the usually questionable cosmopolitan cocktail by swapping cranberry juice for a cranberry-orange marmalade and taps a 1970s Playboy bar book for a daiquiri made with sesame syrup. Guests will also find a few Cleve originals, like an ode to Coolidge Corner deli Jack and Marion's that features Cel-Ray soda.

A MAN'S GOTTA EAT: The food menu's stacked with dry-aged Angus beef patties—Cleve's a fan of the Big Tex ($7.79) topped with bacon, barbecue sauce and onion rings—plus some sandwiches, wings and a Reuben hot dog. / Soroh Hogman

SHOWDOWN

DRAMATIC DUEL

Two literary-themed events this fall each bring a theatrical twist and aren't afraid to drop some knowledge on the audience. We size them up for you in this staged face-off. / Matt Martinelli

COMMONWEALTH SHAKESPEARE COMPANY'S MEASURE FOR MEASURE

The date: Sept. 26

The stage: Lyric Stage

The action: An abridged reading of Shakespeare's legal-leaning play is sandwiched between two discussions. The first focuses on the art and practice of judging, and the second explores how the legal issues in the play can be applied to today's issues.

The players: Two Supreme Court short-list judges will host the discussion, while U.S. District Court Chief Patti Saris and several other federal judges perform the reading as part of an all-judges cast.

The purpose: Presented as part of the Federalist Society's annual Shakespeare and the Law series, the play focuses on the strict enforcement of long-dormant laws about sex and the fallout from a harsh sentence. The discussion will then veer toward how judges interpret and enforce laws.

The tickets: Free; reservations are required

THE TRUSTEES' PRESENTATION OF NATURE

The date: Sept. 22-Oct. 1

The stage: The Old Manse in Concord

The action: An outdoor, walking play, Nature explores the relationship between Ralph Waldo Emerson and Henry David Thoreau. Emerson lived in the Old Manse and Thoreau often visited, eventually planting a kitchen garden that remains in the same location.

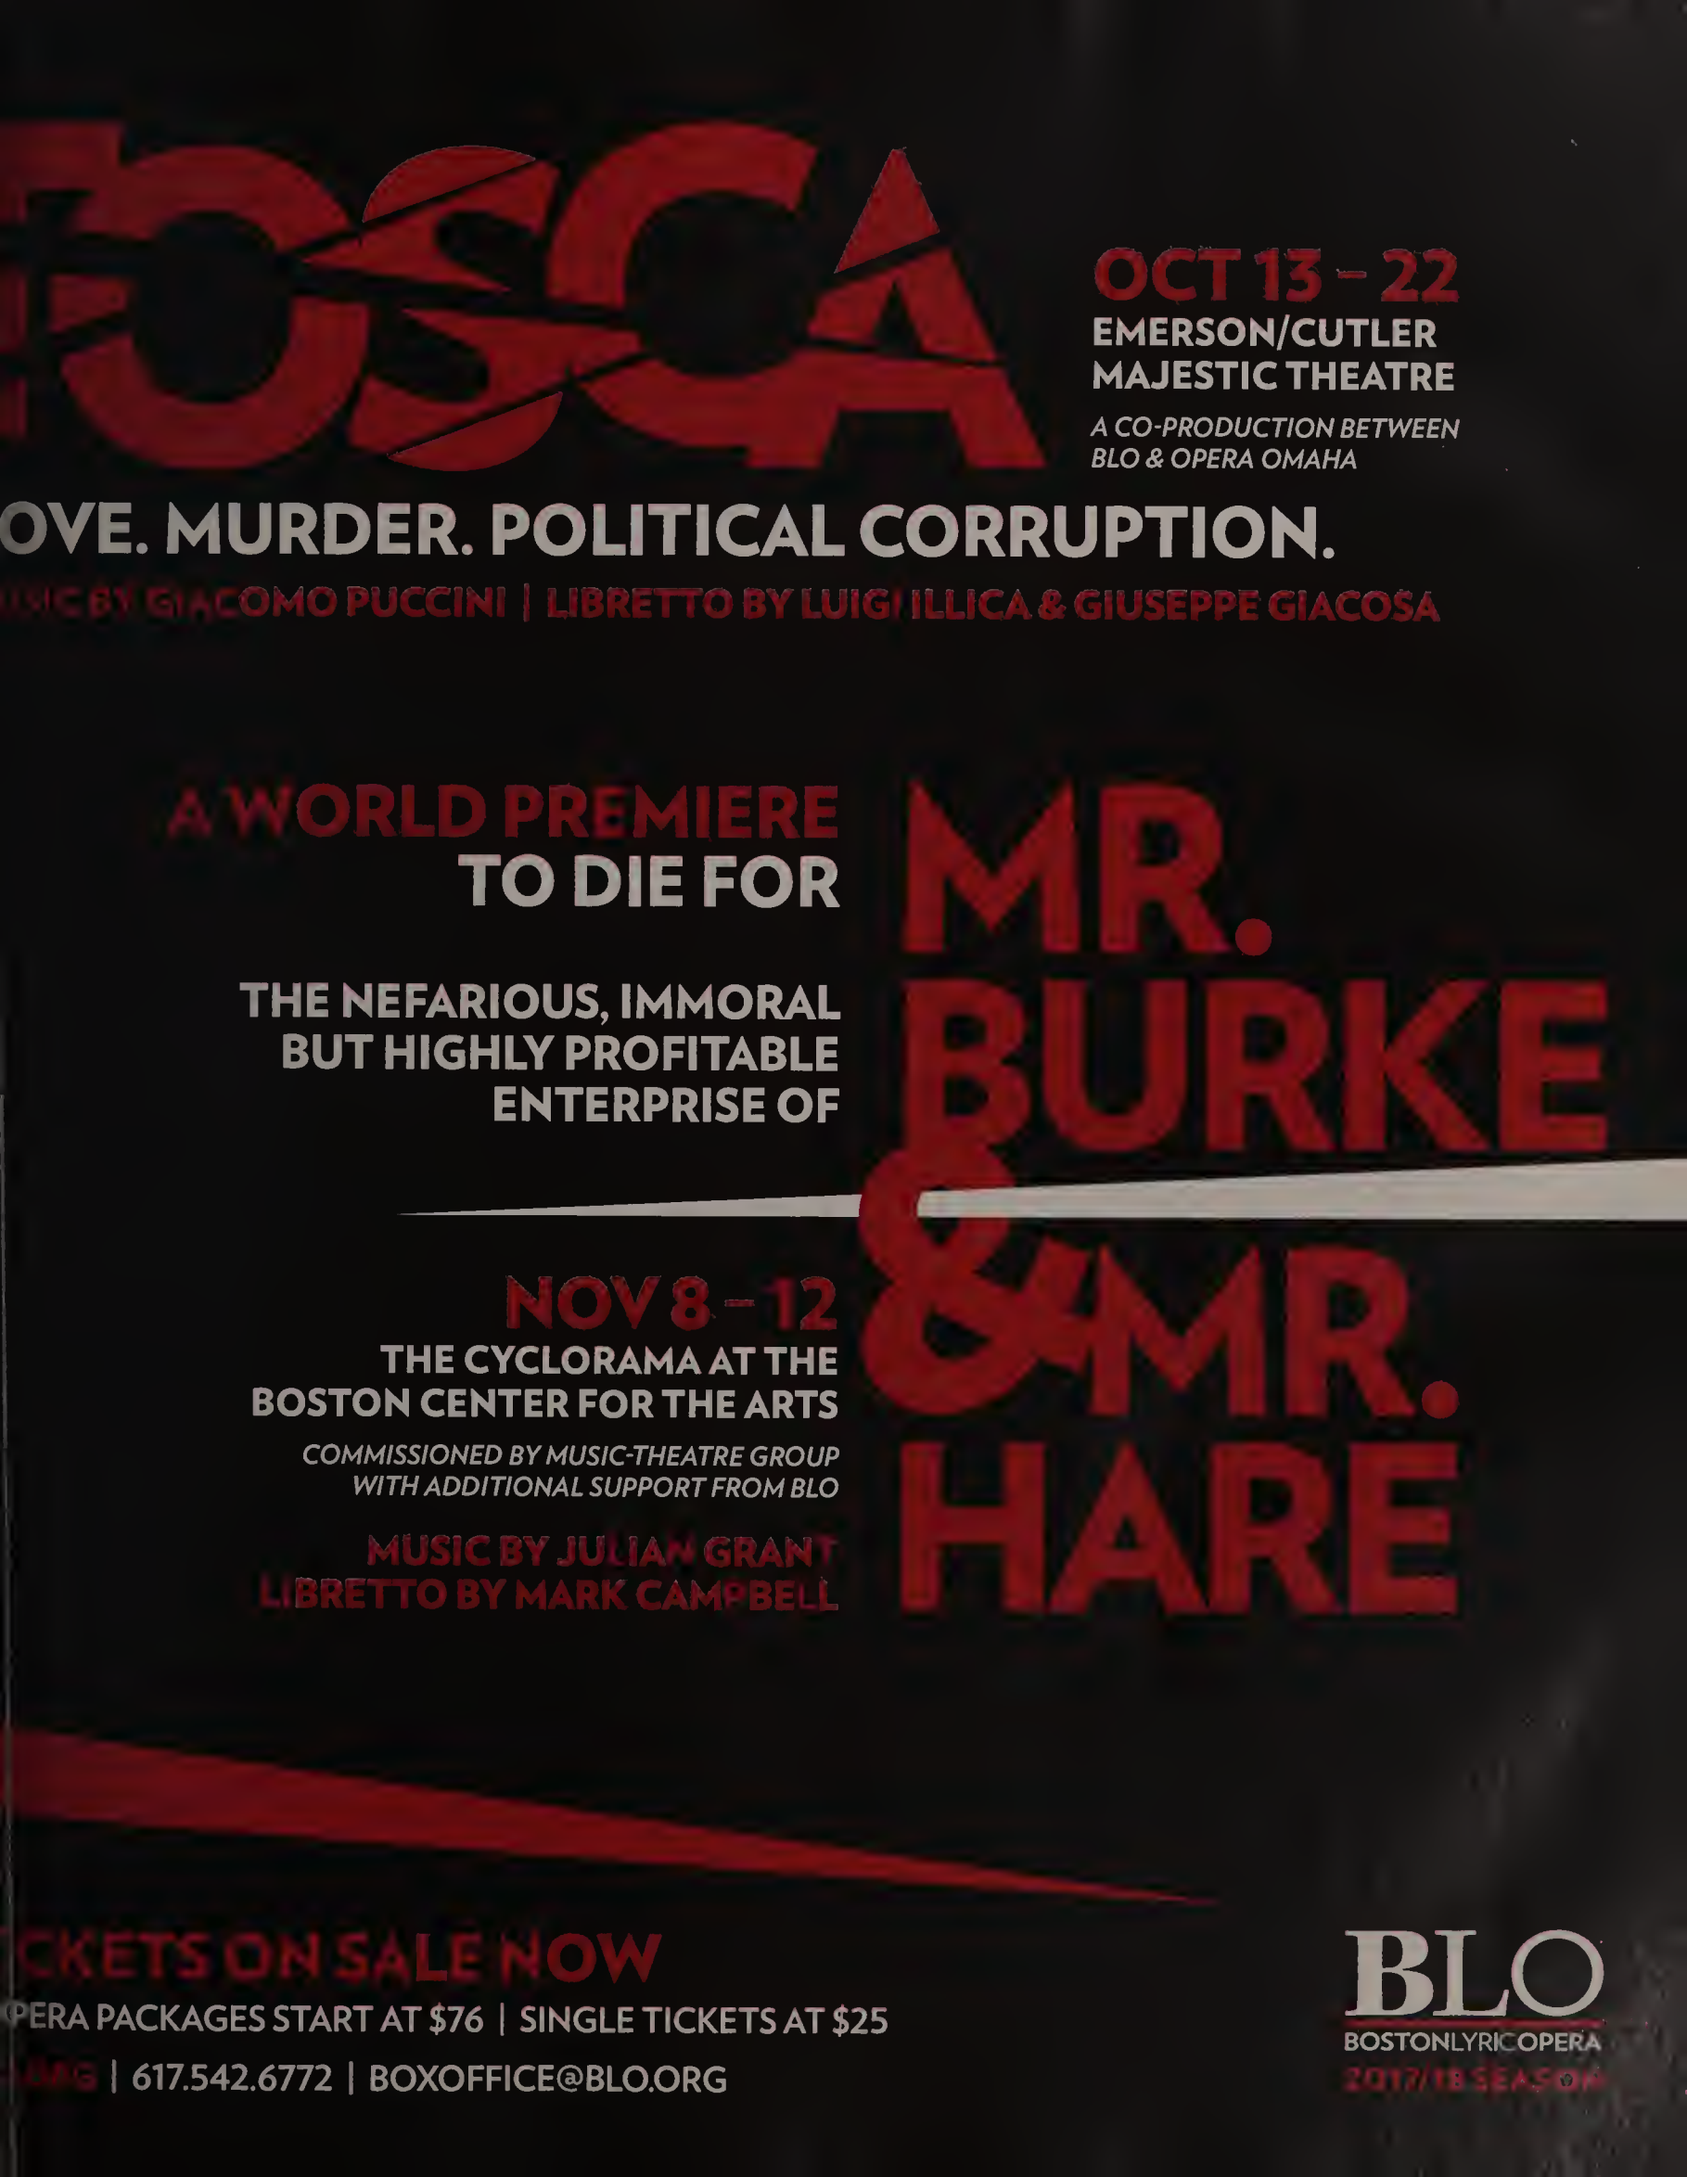
The players: Tyson Forbes, who lived in Concord as a child and is a descendant of Emerson, created the play with his wife, Markell Keifer. An all-volunteer community chorus will perform at the 11 shows.

The purpose: During this East Coast premiere, the audience will be taken through the natural environment of the Old Manse for the 90-minute performance, following the actors across the property where Emerson wrote the first draft of his Nature essay.

The tickets: $10-$25; bring lawn chairs and blankets

Worth the Wait

The forthcoming Waiting Rooms experience at the Museum of Science has already lived up to its name. James Wetzel, a co-producer of the museum's adult programs, and his crew will have spent more than 18 months working on the run when it premieres on Sept. 26 and runs through Oct. 5.



"The process has been extremely detailed and is a revolutionary concept from an institutional perspective," Wetzel says. "There were countless logistics to perfect in order to ensure everything goes 100 percent smoothly."

The four-night experience will steer guests into areas familiar and unfamiliar, and is billed as a social science experiment that explores immigration, economic inequality and bureaucracy. While Wetzel is staying mum on the exact logistics of the installation, the creators of the project, architect Nathalie Pozzi and video game designer Eric Zimmerman, previously ran the experience at the Rubin Museum in New York. And Wetzel at least offers one tip for anyone planning to attend the installation: Wear comfortable clothes.

"[It] will transform the building into an absurdist yet strict social bureaucracy that literally takes over the museum," Wetzel says. "This is not the Museum of Science [guests] know." / Matt Martinelli

BEYOND BELIEF

A LOCAL AUTHOR SHARES HER SEPARATION FROM FAITH

The Book of Separation* by Tova Mirvis
Published by Houghton Mifflin Harcourt, 299 pages, $26

When Tova Mirvis begins to doubt her lifelong religious beliefs as an Orthodox Jew, the deepest ingredients of her identity are imperiled. This memoir from the Newton resident details how she lived under many required practices that are very different from the modern world—and how separating from her religion led to the destruction of her marriage and her faith.

While holidays such as Yom Kippur, Shabbat and Rosh Hashanah are enriching and help Tova bond with her community, she feels increasingly constrained by orthodox restrictions. Early marriage is required, and so after a speedy courtship, she and highly observant Aaron have three children. Rules dictate that married women must cover their hair, and the mikvah plays a part in women's sex lives.

Detailing her journey with grace and subtlety, Tova recounts a growing shift in her feelings about god and her long-accepted beliefs. Her new identity, brimming with doubt but exhilarated by newfound independence, also brings loss. Her husband is terrified. However, one son also questions his upbringing and sneaks off with his mother to enjoy an exciting, non-kosher pizza.

Tova is now challenged on her looser outlook by her vigilant rabbis, who were once her mentors. Soon, she connects with a non-practicing Jewish boyfriend and compares the experience to being on a kayak ride as opposed to being on a large, formal ship. Her dazed children painfully connect her to the life she's pulling away from, but she honors their feelings while also encouraging them to choose their own path, as she's done.

From page 200: "In a few minutes, I would go back downstairs, but right now, I made sure the bathroom door was locked. I stared at my phone. Could I actually break a rule of Shabbat, or would the forces of taboo and guilt, if not actual belief, hold me back? And if that failed, maybe the entwined loyalty to my marriage would keep me inside." ◆

The Neon Museum, a two-acre outdoor labyrinth of more than 200 retired signs from Vegas' marquee-filled history, is best to check out at night when the bulbs shine bright for #nofilter photos.

An overview of underworld crime housed in a former courthouse, the Mob Museum is filled with weird relics like actual bricks and bullet casings from the St. Valentine's Day Massacre.

ORIGINAL SIN: Downtown Las Vegas features public art aplenty as well as good eats and drinks.

Travel / Scott Kearnan

VEGAS, SANS STRIP

A FAMILIAR DESTINATION'S DOWNTOWN PROVIDES NEW THRILLS

As beaten paths go, the Las Vegas Strip is pretty well clobbered. According to the Las Vegas Convention and Visitors Authority, a record 42.9 million people visited Southern Nevada last year, and the vast majority came to see sequin-filled stage shows and caress casino slot machines on Sin City's most famous thoroughfare.

For Vegas haters, meanwhile, the Strip's 4-mile parade of bright lights, booming nightclubs and recycled air is exactly the kind of sensory assault that keeps them away. But wait! Even one of America's most visited cities has an underexplored side: its downtown.

Once upon a fairly recent time, Downtown Vegas didn't turn heads—unless people were walking in the other direction, away from hookers and blight. But the area has undergone a dramatic transformation lately, much of it credited to a $350 million revitalization effort financed by Zappos CEO Tony Hsieh, who moved the company to the former city hall building in 2013. The resultant Downtown Project has fostered a new direction for the neighborhood that befits its bankroller's tech-industry culture. Hipster-leaning restaurants, bars and a major music festival have since sprung up, and the scene feels locally fueled—unlike the Strip, where out-of-town corporations move in to plant their latest neon flag.

Take the fifth annual Life is Beautiful Music and Art Festival, which runs Sept. 22-24. Life is Beautiful was recently dubbed "Festival of the Year" by Pollstar, the concert industry's trade publication, and the 2017 installment again highlights music heavyweights—like Chance the Rapper, Muse, Lorde and Kaskade—alongside dozens of even edgier acts. But unlike certain other flower crown-filled affairs, Life still feels homegrown. It helps that the festival—which cordons off an 18-block swath of downtown, filling it with chef-driven food trucks and pop-up craft cocktail bars—also imports impressive murals and art installations (18 this year alone) by international names like Shepard Fairey. Many works remain after the crowds clear, turning Downtown Vegas into a permanent public art playground worth perusing anytime.

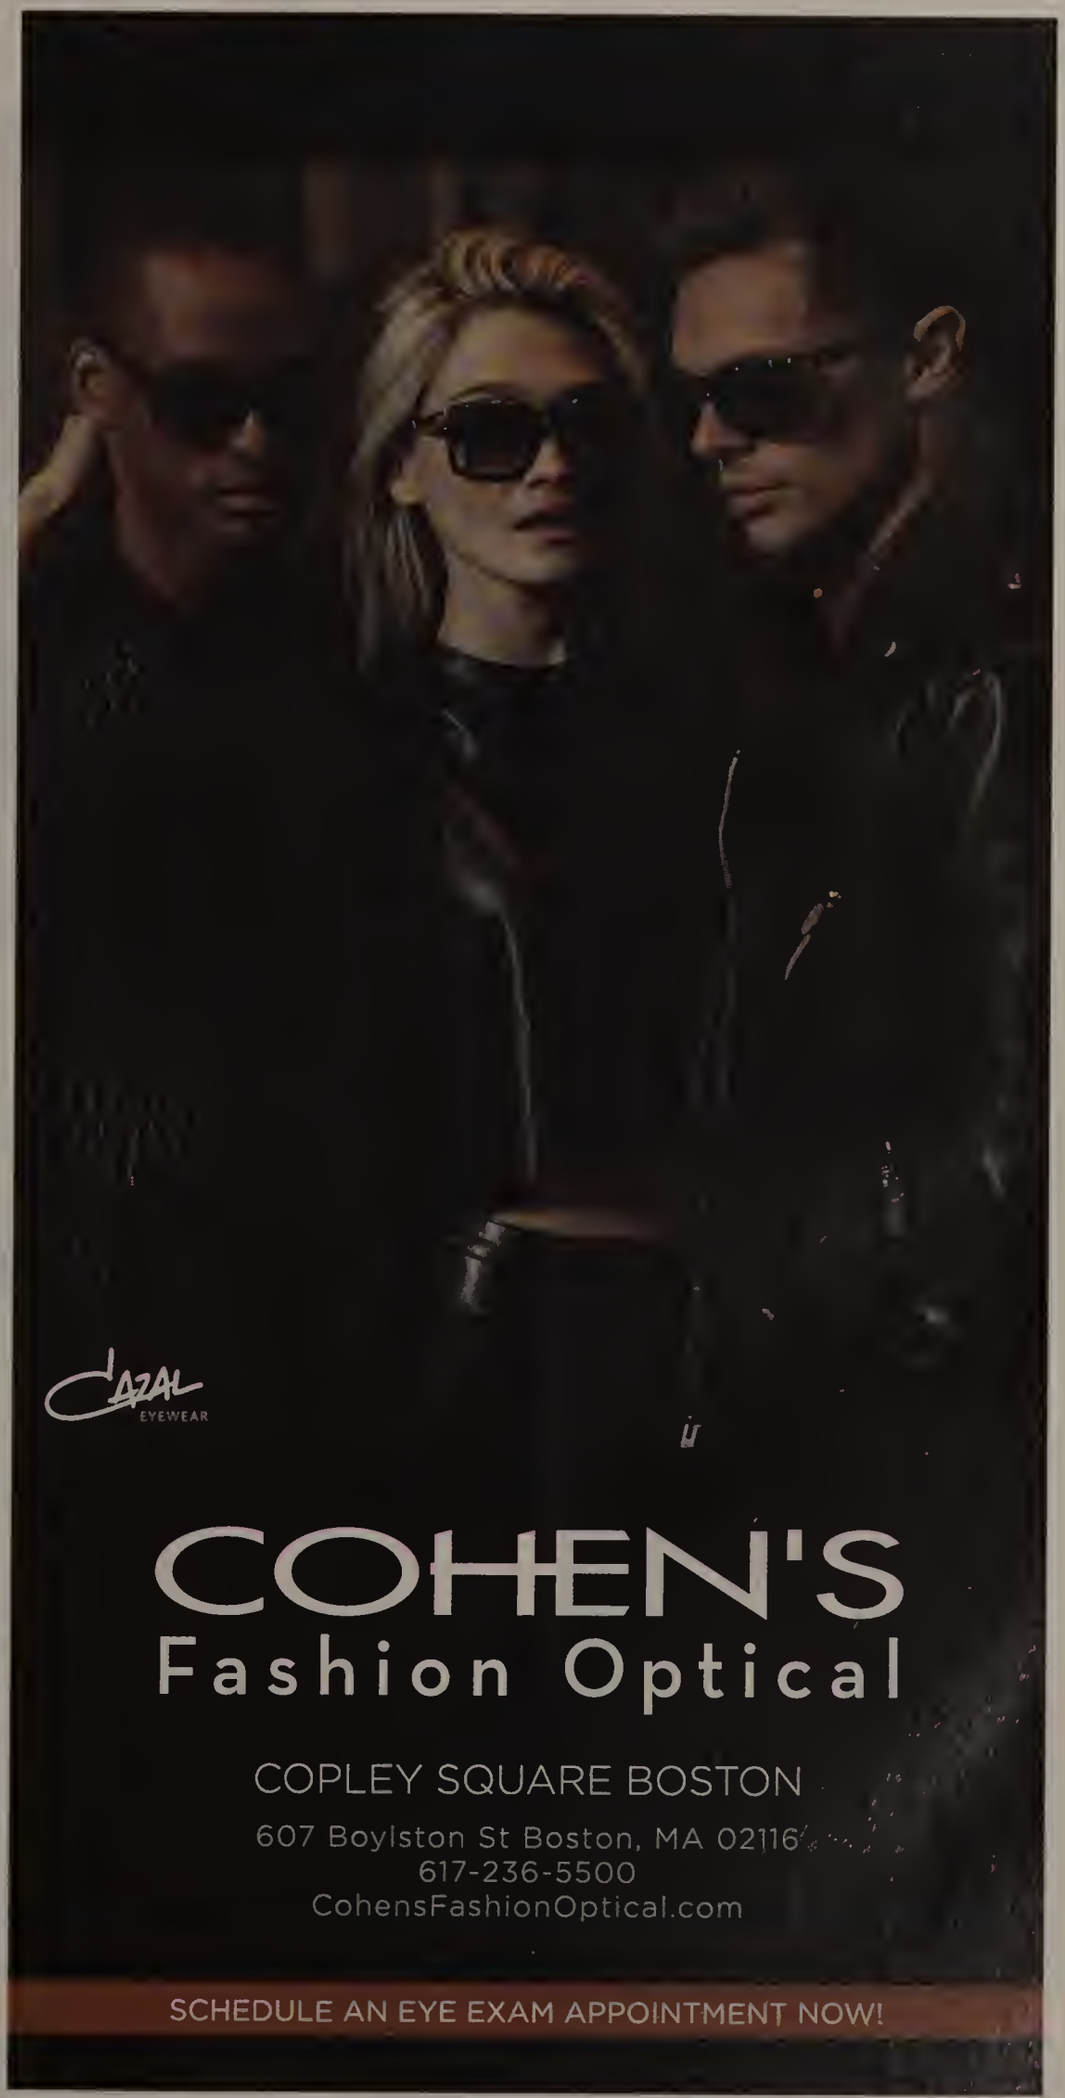
Whenever you visit, follow the propane-fueled flames that shoot from the antennae of a 40-foot-tall praying mantis made of recycled steel. This sculpture sits outside of Downtown Container Park, an open-air shopping center made of repurposed shipping containers that houses more than 30 local boutiques and eateries—plus The Dome, a 360-degree planetarium-style theater.



Stay "East of Fremont," as locals call the area outside the Fremont Street Experience, a touristy multi-block pedestrian mall. Outside of it is where you'll find legit, local-loved restaurants including Carson Kitchen, an urban gastropub inside a former midcentury motel, where shared plates like crispy chicken skins with smoked honey and pork belly- and fig-topped flatbreads taste best around the patio's fire pit. Or dig into jalapeno- and chipotle ranch-soaked "garbage fries" at Park on Fremont, where the craft beer list runs deep.

Don nightcaps at the awesome time warp that is Atomic Liquors, billed as Vegas' oldest free-standing bar and named in reference to the 1950s crowds who watched atomic blast tests in the desert from its roof; today it's a rockabilly-hipster hangout. For something more modern, bounce over to Velveteen Rabbit, a sisters-owned cocktail lounge where DJs spin chill beats and local cool kids sip elixirs like the Rum-Ham Sour, made with maple-bacon fat-washed rum and spiced pineapple.

Downtown offers plenty by day, too. Arrive early to cult favorite bakery Donut Bar—spinoff to a San Diego original—where flavors like blood orange and Mexican hot chocolate fly off shelves fast. Then flip through pages at The Writer's Block, Vegas' first indie bookstore, or scour for vinyl records at 11th Street Records, home to a studio where Vegas' own the Killers recorded much of their new album, Wonderful Wonderful, out this month.

Of course, a few trips to the Strip will be inevitable—so lay your head at the new W Las Vegas, which opened in December. The 289-room hotel is right by the downtown borderline on the Strip's north end and inhabits the space that once belonged to the iconic Sahara casino—hence the playfully 1970s-chic lobby. However, the contemporary rooms, designed by Philippe Starck (minus one unique Lenny Kravitz-styled penthouse), are appointed for modern high rollers. Bonus: the rooftop pool deck is a laidback scene for sipping and sunning, a departure from typical Vegas party pools, and though the W's adjacent to the SLS casino floor, the hotel can be accessed without going through gaming areas. These may be small features, but they make a big difference. Sometimes it's nice to experience another side of Sin City. ◆

GREAT WHITE NORTH

CAFÉ DU PAYS LINKS THE KINDRED SOULS OF QUÉBÉCOIS AND NEW ENGLAND CUISINES

MASSACHUSETTS EMBRACED A flood of French-Canadian immigrants in the late 19th-century, and in many commonwealth towns, their descendants still prepare grand-mère's recipe for meat pie every holiday. Gussied-up versions of poutine, the humble Québécois drunk food, have dotted Boston menus for a decade. But a refined take on French-Canadian fare never had its own restaurant here, until the team behind State Park and Mamaleh's—John Kessen, Rachel Miller Munzer, Alon Munzer, Heather Mojer, Tyler Sundet and Rachel Sundet—recently opened Café du Pays.

The cuisine's ethos combines French technique and love of seasonal sourcing, adds a welter of wild, foraged and cultivated foodstuffs from flinty Northern woods, farms and waters, and leavens it with the thrift and heartiness needed to survive harsh winters. Chef Dan Amighi (ex-Little Big Diner) opens his menu with a wondrous, hard-crusted sourdough with cultured butter ($6) and tres-Français radish slices ($2). Summer pea soup ($8), an elegant take on the poverty cuisine standby, is a limpid broth floating vivid peas, sunchokes, radishes and luscious strips of smoked pork. Crudites ($13) offer a rainbow of raw vegetables—green cauliflower, yellow and ink-black pole beans, pink radishes, pale baby parsnips—with aioli and oily, salty herbes salées to dip them in. Mushroom oreilles de crisse ($5) have the exact crunch, bubbly texture and saltiness of fried pork rinds, but are based on tapioca: the most convincing mock-meat product I've ever tasted.

Razor clams ($16) offer a beautiful array of the totally tubular bivalves, dolloped with salmon roe, purple cress, fresh bay leaves and a tiny dice of carrots in a puddle of broth. Tourtière ($12) presents a thinnish, individual-sized version of that famed meat pie, here filled with ground pork and venison in a superbly flaky crust and accompanied by a vivid ketchup with a chrain-like sweetness and horseradishy zip. The de rigueur "Yes, we have Poutine" ($10) tops good, finger-thick fries with squeaky-fresh cheese curds and a wicked gravy (frugally built from various meat trimmings) that's judiciously applied to dodge the bane of sogginess.

Amighi also ably lands three charcuterie plates: ham ($8), wet-cured in-house and sweetened with maple sugar and a smear of blueberry mustard; a creamy, sumptuous foie gras torchon ($12), which cleverly swaps pickled mushrooms for cornichons to add acid counterweight; and another canonical Québécois dish, creton ($8), a salty, stiff pork pâté striped with bittersweet birch syrup and topped with fried pork rinds. Shareable sides, all big portions and flavors, include a simply dressed, eye-watering bitter herb salad ($12), a pilaf ($12) of brown and wild rice flecked with brunoise and possibly a stick of butter, and artichokes ($14) crisply deep-fried and punched up with lemon foie butter.

Big, dark-fleshed proteins get their due in a thick fillet of bluefish ($28) slathered in juniper salt and kale. The oily game fish works better with this assertive accompaniment than the flounder we tried on another visit. Half duck ($40) combines a generous fan of ruby-toned breast slices nestling a thin layer of hot white fat under nicely-crisped skin, plus a deeply-smoked, blackened leg and a late-summer tomato salad, providing tangy contrast. Only deer ($38), a red-deer/elk hybrid, fails to make a lasting impression: Venison slices under a blanket of huckleberries are so tender and mild that one might mistake them for pork tenderloin. Too much of the forest has been farmed out of it.

Desserts include old-timey favorites like the tarte au sucre ($12), a maple-sugar pie dotted with crème fraiche amid a circular smear of roasted elderberry sauce, and pouding chômeur ($12), a kind of hot blueberry-flecked buckwheat pancake in a puddle of maple cream, served in a cast-iron pan and topped with a tableside pour of juniper anglaise. The beverage program features a 38-bottle, heavily French wine list ($30-$176) with lots of fine choices under $60, and a tight selection of French brandies, eaux de vie, cordials and some lovely, little-seen bottlings of Pineau des Charentes ($9-$14 per glass). Sweet-leaning, Canadian-accented specialty cocktails ($10-$14) are served in beautiful glasses; Le Habitant ($12), a whiskey sour variant with maple, lemon and bitters, achieves the nicest balance. Beers ($4-$11, $25 for large format) are mostly Canadian, like the Unibroue Trois Pistoles ($11), a funky, Belgian-style dark ale, and St. Ambroise ($7.50), a light-bodied oatmeal stout.

The two dining areas are like night and day: The rear room features dim, romantic lighting, polished black brick walls, dark wood surfaces and floral wallpaper backing its booth and deco accents in the intimate six-seat bar. The front room, with white walls and abundant plants, feels much sunnier, like the enclosed porch of a French farmhouse. Noise levels are tolerable against a soundtrack of French-language '60s rock and pop covers. Service feels more polished and formal than at this group's other restaurants, befitting the swanker setting, menu and prices. There's an awful lot that feels familiar about the joint—Quebec and New England share more than a long border, after all—but plenty that feels fresh, with all those novel tree-derived flavors. Winter is indeed coming, and Café du Pays shapes up as one of the more beguiling new spots to pass some of the long nights ahead. ◆

HONEY, I'M GOOD

➜ On Aug. 23, young professionals group the Good Ones hosted HONEYCOMB3, its third honey-inspired party where young entrepreneurs showcased their newest honey-based food and drink. The 80 guests took in the view from 315 A Street's 20th-story penthouse while listening to music from DJs Jaminic and Yana. The evening included another sweet treat: The Good Ones pledged $1,000 to support member Katie Dolaher's marathon to benefit the American Cancer Society.

➜ It was a wild time among wildlife on Aug. 19 at the Brew at the Zoo, held at Franklin Park Zoo. This eighth annual event brought together 46 breweries and more than 1,900 guests to mix and mingle with the real party animals, which zookeepers brought into the late-afternoon affair to meet partygoers. The event raised $109,000 to support the zoo's education programs and conservation initiatives.

Q: I HAVE HEARD THAT CHEMICAL PEELS ARE A GOOD WAY TO FRESHEN UP MY SKIN AFTER THE SUMMER, BUT IT SOUNDS SCARY...

A: There is nothing to be afraid of! Despite the word "chemical", most peels are actually comprised of natural compounds such as glycolic or lactic acid, or enzymes. Chemical peels are professional skin care treatments that provide gentle exfoliation to reveal fresher, healthier skin. A topical peeling solution is applied to the skin to loosen and remove the upper layers of dead and damaged skin and reveal new, fresher skin underneath.

Each day thousands of our skin cells die, flake off, and are replaced by new cells. Chemical peels speed up this process. Peels can be used for skin rejuvenation to help reverse the signs of aging and the damage of past sun exposure. They can also be used on oily skin to help to control acne and breakouts. Peels can help dry, sensitive skin look revitalized. Peels only take a few minutes and there is usually no downtime.

STRONGER ★★★½

Starring Jake Gyllenhaal, Tatiana Maslany, Miranda Richardson, Clancy Brown, Richard Lane Jr., Nate Richman, Kate Fitzgerald, Danny McCarthy, Frankie Shaw, Tony Viveiros, Patricia Ross, James LeBlanc and Carlos Sanz. Written by John Pollono, based on the book Stronger, by Jeff Bauman and Bret Witter. Directed by David Gordon Green. At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.

Last Christmas, in his grossly exploitative vanity project Patriots Day, Dorchester-born actor/producer Mark Wahlberg cast himself as the hero of 2013's horrific Boston Marathon bombing. Playing Sgt. Tommy Saunders in director Peter Berg's procedural, Wahlberg's completely fictional character was not only present for every big moment—from witnessing the blasts at the finish line to discovering Dzhokhar Tsarnaev hiding inside a boat in a Watertown backyard—but also offered homespun advice to the FBI agents in charge of the case. Hell, even David Ortiz stopped to shake Wahlberg's hand at Fenway Park just before the slugger delivered his iconic "This is our fucking city" speech. It is our fucking city, and we deserved a hell of a lot better than that tasteless cash-in on a tragedy. And now we have it.

Mind you, director David Gordon Green's Stronger, which has been adapted from the memoir penned by bombing survivor Jeff Bauman (and his co-writer Bret Witter), could have easily become the kind of hagiographic portrait of a person overcoming adversity that you'd expect to find on the Lifetime network. However, the intimate, character-driven script by John Pollono presents Bauman as a deeply flawed young man who's wildly uncomfortable with the heroic spotlight that's been shone on him by the media and public. As anyone who's familiar with Green's eclectic directing career can attest, the Texan filmmaker is right at home crafting portraits of deeply flawed men, in both dramas (from his acclaimed debut, 2000's George Washington, to 2014's Manglehorn) and comedies (from 2008's Pineapple Express to 15 episodes of HBO's Eastbound & Down).

Stronger is no different. It's easy to take Jake Gyllenhaal for granted. An Oscar nominee in his mid-20s for his co-starring role in 2005's Brokeback Mountain, the actor portraying Bauman has spent the past dozen years bouncing between big budget studio fare like 2010's Prince of Persia: The Sands of Time and smaller-scale indie projects like 2013's little-seen Enemy. But his dedication to craft comes into sharp focus under the watchful lens of Green and Sean Bobbitt (cinematographer on all four of director Steve McQueen's pictures, including Best Picture-winner 12 Years a Slave and next year's Widows).

Gyllenhaal's tremendous performance allows you to follow along during each pivotal step.

Although both Patriots Day and Stronger utilize the marathon bombing as the framing device for the stories they're telling, Green's film doesn't rely on the tragedy as the primary focus. Rather, it's the random backdrop that sets the man-child on a journey toward recovery: As he gradually learns to walk on artificial limbs after losing both of his legs, he also takes his first steps toward growing up—and Gyllenhaal's tremendous performance allows you to follow along during each pivotal step.

It helps that Gyllenhaal's character seldom feels isolated. Bauman, then a 27-year-old deli counter worker at Costco, was waiting at the race's finish line to cheer for his on-again, off-again girlfriend, Erin Hurley, a young woman who the film takes pains to let us know he was rarely there for, except at this worst possible moment. And as strong as Gyllenhaal's work is, the work by Canadian actress Tatiana Maslany (star of TV's Orphan Black) is, well, stronger. Hurley sacrifices a tremendous amount, from her job to her family, to be at Bauman's side during his long road to recovery—and their bumpy route toward making a relationship work.

It's a story that could have quickly descended into cliche, especially during the many scenes set in the cramped Chelmsford apartment where Bauman still lives with his mother, Patty (British actress Miranda Richardson), an alcoholic who's suspicious of the woman who's moved into her home. However, Green's choice to keep the focus on the struggling couple lends the picture an intimacy that pays huge emotional dividends; Green frequently stays on the faces of Bauman and Hurley, keeping the world and people around them in shallow focus.

A great example of this comes during the painfully effective scene when Bauman's bandages are first being removed. Green holds his camera tight on the duo as the doctors and nurses (many of them played by the actual people who assisted with the real Bauman's recovery) remain a blur in the background. And Green stays with this approach even as Pollono's screenplay focuses on the mundane details of the recovery, such as how Bauman learns to maneuver once-simple tasks like using a toilet.

Moments like these keep the film grounded. Green could have easily presented Bauman as a fictional construct like Sgt. Saunders, an "inspiring" figure who serves as a hero, but the man he reveals is no saint; instead, Gyllenhaal's Bauman is simply a person who was at the right place at the wrong time. Filled with imperfections that most of us can identify with, Bauman becomes more than the bloodied, shell-shocked face at the finish line, or the smiling young man who waved a flag from the ice before a Bruins game and threw out the first pitch at Fenway Park. He may have lost his footing, but his humanity's intact. ◆

SHUFFLE PLAY

A DRUMMER TO THE STARS REUNITES WITH A KINDRED KEYBOARDIST

Steve Gadd played Fenway Park last month as James Taylor's drummer and now he's on the phone from New York, where he's between nights at Madison Square Garden, anchoring the kit for Eric Clapton's only North American dates. A week later, he's co-leading a band with Chick Corea for 10 nights at the Blue Note before they head to the Berklee Performance Center on Oct. 1.

"It's always trying to put the puzzle together with the schedule—and some years are busier than others," says Gadd, 72. "It's not every year I have an opportunity to work with all three of those people. When it happens, I definitely do whatever I can to do those gigs because I love those guys."

He particularly enjoys a lengthy relationship with keyboardist Corea, 76. They met in the '60s, playing six nights a week in Gadd's hometown of Rochester, New York, in a jazz group that included flugelhornist Chuck Mangione. When Corea launched his seminal fusion outfit Return to Forever in the carly '70s, Gadd was also initially onboard, but dropped out.

"It wasn't the right time for me to be able to commit to a band and be on the road," the drummer says. "I'd just moved to New York and had babies."

But he birthed an alternate legacy. "I was getting called for a lot of recording work, which meant that I did not have to be on the road and I could get home," Gadd says. "When I came to New York, I took whatever came in. I liked a lot of different music and luckily I didn't get categorized."

"I just sort of let the music dictate where it should go, and the people that you're playing with, they bring different things out of you."

He went on to play on more than 500 records, with artists from Mangione to Aretha Franklin, Bette Midler, Bonnie Raitt, George Benson, Carly Simon and Weather Report in the '70s alone. While he passed on Return to Forever, Gadd also played on several of Corea's '70s albums, including The Leprechaun and My Spanish Heart, as well as 1981's great Three Quartets with Michael Brecker.

But two of his '70s performances became immortal. One was his climactic fills on the title track of Steely Dan's Aja. "When you were recording for pop music, the idea was probably not to be real busy," he says. "They sort of wanted it crazy." The other: his offbeat shuffle on Paul Simon's "50 Ways to Leave Your Lover."

"Sessions are sort of give and take," Gadd says. "Certain things come together right away and other parts, you have to work a little harder." In the case of "50 Ways," the choruses went relatively easy but the verses weren't clicking. While Simon and producer Phil Ramone were listening to playbacks, the drummer was practicing in a booth when Ramone heard a pattern he embraced for the verses. "Sometimes you get lucky," Gadd says. "In that situation, we got lucky."

It's not like he's hired for one signature sound, says Gadd, who later recorded with artists as diverse as Paul McCartney, Al DiMeola, the Bee Gees, Diana Ross, Frank Sinatra and Kate Bush in addition to Clapton and Taylor.

"I just sort of let the music dictate where it should go, and the people that you're playing with, they bring different things out of you," Gadd says. "You're trying to apply things that you know and understand new things that people want you to try."

He was initially drawn to jazz through his family, notably when an uncle noticed his nephew was "banging on everything when I was around 3 years old and channeled it." Gadd cites such drummers as Gene Krupa, Buddy Rich, Louie Bellson, Elvin Jones and Tony Williams among his influences.

Corea has lauded Gadd's orchestral and compositional approach. The drummer studied at the Eastman School of Music, playing in wind ensemble and orchestra settings, which Gadd says he applied to Corea's 1976 outing The Leprechaun.

Now the pair plans an early 2018 release of their new studio album, Chinese Butterfly, in addition to shows with their co-led band, featuring guitarist Lionel Loueke and saxophonist Steve Wilson. But it began with just Corea and Gadd in the studio. "We had so much fun," Gadd says. "It seemed to make sense to try and take it further." ◆

LOAD OF GOOP

A DEEP, DISTURBING DIVE INTO GWYNETH PALTROW'S INSANE EMPIRE

THERE IS NO GOOP CITY GUIDE FOR BOSTON. Maybe you don't know what that means, but I assure you it's a badge of honor. Because we can infer by omission that Boston isn't a Gwyneth Paltrow kind of place, and that news is worthy of celebration. Out on the Mass Pike, there should be a sign: "Welcome to Boston. Not a Gwyneth Paltrow Kind of Place."

Goop is Paltrow's lifestyle website, where she hawks clothes and new-agey health products and projects her demented version of reality. It's like Martha Stewart crossed with the Psychic Friends Network and Zoolander. My friend Lyn told me to check it out, describing Goop as a bottomless mine of pretentious celebrity nonsense. Having now spent way more time than is healthy immersing myself in Goop, I have to qualify that characterization. Some of it isn't pretentious. Like, Goop's closest city guide is for Newport, and it tells you the best place to get kaftans. That's just some solid advice we can all use. I mean, how many times have you been in Newport and said, "Where do I find a good kaftan around here? And also, what is a kaftan?"

Whatever a kaftan is, Goop will sell you one for $395. Actually, Goop will sell you lots of things, essentials hand-picked by a down-to-earth mom with kids named Apple and Moses and only several Coldplay songs about her. Her perception of money—"I can't believe these psychics only charge $300 per session!"—translates to Goop's product offerings. For instance, we all need serving bowls, right? Gwyneth's got bowls for sale, and for only $458. And yes, that's per bowl. Is that a lot? It looks pretty reasonable in comparison to the $15,000 24-karat gold vibrator.

Indeed, that is a real thing you can buy through the Goop store. I verified that by clicking through "shop" just to see what would happen (and irreversibly warp whatever Amazon shopping-analysis software is probably buried in my browser). Well, turns out the vibrator doesn't have to be gold. There's also a silver one for $7,900, if you're feeling frugal. But either way: free shipping.

You also get free shipping on Goop's custom vitamin packets, which are not called vitamins. They're "protocols," which is why they cost $90 for a month's supply. There are four varieties, but the general idea is that you need some gluten-free fish oil, lady, and stat! Goop's FAQ section asserts that the formula for pregnant women—The Mother Lode—is the only supplement package that won't be beneficial for men. Which is interesting, given that one of the other ones is designed to cope with menopause. What, you think men can't have menopause? It's right there in the word. Stop buying into the rigid strictures of Western medicine.

A LITTLE HELP: Goop offers advice on how best to care for the "littles"

Goop has its own vocabulary, which isn't surprising coming from the woman who gave us "conscious uncoupling." For instance, kids are called "littles." As in, "We were sharing our favorite recipes for coconut aminos when the nanny brought the littles in from the guest house."

Goop also loves the word "insane." Jicama shrimp tacos are "insanely delicious." A website is "insanely-helpful," although apparently not helpful enough to remind Goop that you don't hyphenate an adverb. Other things that are insane: scrambled eggs, flavored organic tortilla chips and the prices on St. Barts (expensive, actually, but you should go).

Paltrow is also into manifesting. Which is to say, if you want something in life, you just have to think about it really hard and then it'll appear, like the Stay Puft Marshmallow Man in Ghostbusters. "Manifest the career you want," Goop says, as if that's as easy as manifesting an organic green tea smoothie from someone who manifested a barista job instead of manifesting a lead role in Shallow Hal. According to Goop, you can manifest dehydration in your body (your emotional body, obvs) and you can manifest a small business. Honestly, you can manifest so many things it's insane.

Well, turns out the vibrator doesn't have to be gold. There's also a silver one for $7,900, if you're feeling frugal. But either way: free shipping.

Health-wise, Goop is super concerned about Lyme disease, which leads me to believe that Gwyneth Paltrow probably learned the hard way not to let her littles have a pet deer. A search for the word "Lyme" on the site gets you 21 articles. The phrase "heart disease" gets you nothing; although "heart" does generate plenty of results, like the word "heartbreak," which is used in the context of human rights crises. Just kidding. It's used to describe how you should feel about adulterated olive oils. I believe Shakespeare wrote several tragedies about lovers who discovered that their EVOO was 49 percent soybean oil.

Oh, there's more. There's so much more. There's an "it" flour you need to know about. Your pelvic floor is probably a problem, but as we all know, any good integrative structural specialist can help you tune up that sucker. And did you think Gwyneth doesn't care about your gut health? She does, and she'll even sell you a gut report kit. "See what you're actually made of on the inside," Goop proposes. If you think this project will involve putting your poop in the mail, you're absolutely right. I'd try it, but it costs $180. And for that kind of money, I'm halfway to a kaftan. ◆

The Dance / John D. Spooner

STAND TALL

SOUND ADVICE ON WEDDING HEIGHT, FAMILY FIRES AND SOCIAL MEDIA MISSTEPS

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com

My fiance and I are about the same height. I want to wear pumps at our wedding, but he says it'll ruin the pictures because I'll be taller than him. Honestly, who cares? I know they make some cute flats these days, but I feel like even if I find a pair, I won't really be dressed up. If it means that much to him, I'll wear flats, but I'm hoping this isn't the start of some masculinity issue. Should it really bother you if your wife is taller than you? I think this could be more of an ego thing than worrying about how the wedding photos will look. What do you think?
Well, I'm immature and slightly old-fashioned. I was happy that I was taller than my wife. And she was fond of saying, "Never marry anyone more beautiful than you." So, as usual, women are more secure in their own skin. They know themselves. Your fiance basically knows that the traditional male role was to, "Go out, kill the brontosaurus, and bring home the steaks." It's tough to break the habits of thousands of years. But he has to.

Many of the great male movie stars had to stand on boxes to be taller than their female co-stars. He should allow you to stand tall in your wedding heels; he can stand tall in his ability to prosper in his life and in his understanding of your shared responsibilities. And he can stand tall in his love for you, regardless of height.

There was a fire in my parents' home that did extensive damage. I suspect it was caused by my brother, who has a drug-filled past and an obsession with matches and lighting fires. I doubt my parents will share my suspicion. Should I tell them anyway, or go to the authorities? All families are challenging. This situation you describe, if true, is far from unique. I'll guarantee you that your parents are aware of your brother's problems, because they've probably been dealing with his issues for a long time. First thing: Do not call the authorities. It will complicate your life way more than you ever imagined. But do talk to your parents about your concerns. Ask if you can help in any way. This situation will play itself out, but you want to preserve your own sanity and keep your distance.

DIFFERING HEIGHTS

My husband and I each have a 401(k), and President Trump scares the hell out of me. I'm afraid he'll scare the hell out of my retirement money. Am I overreacting? Our savings are precious to us. Often, in watching over other people's money, I try to determine the worst-case scenario while preparing for the inevitable bumps in markets. If you and your husband are young, then your money has many years to grow, many presidents to watch and fear—or watch and cheer. And, if you believe in the long-term prosperity of America, you should always be a buyer of great companies' stock in times of distress. This is how you can build wealth. Try to separate your emotions from investment decisions.

I'm applying for my first job. In the past, I've posted some regrettable things on social media. I've already made it through extensive vetting, but I'm wondering if I should tell my interviewer. If your first job is with the government in any way, perhaps your indiscretions will catch up with you. The paranoid side of me thinks that the government will turn over any rock to find what secrets you're storing. But if you're talking about employment in almost any other area, you should take your chances and say nothing about private social networks. In my conversations with many non-government employers, they say they do not check your personal sites looking for bad behavior. But a few say that management might Google you for a sampling of your Facebook action.

A smart young woman I know told me, "To avoid most people or potential employers, some of my girlfriends set up private accounts using their first and middle names. Like 'Margaret Ballou Cohen' would use 'Margaret Ballou.'" If it were me, and—after being overserved one night—I posted selfies of my inappropriate tattoos, I would "show no weakness" to my new employer and concentrate on how I could add value to their business. ◆

Soroff On / Jenny Slate

OUT OF HER SHELL

THE ACTRESS DISHES ON TABLOID LIFE, DRAMATIC ROLES AND HUMPING GLOWORMS

COMEDIAN, ACTRESS AND AUTHOR JENNY SLATE, 35, was born and raised in Milton and attended Milton Academy before earning her undergraduate degree at Columbia University. The co-creator of the Marcel the Shell With Shoes On short films and children's book series has starred in the feature films Obvious Child and Gifted, and recently finished work on three new projects, the film Hotel Artemis, the animated show Big Mouth and live-action series Comrade Detective. On television, she was a cast member of Saturday Night Live's 2009-10 season, and she has appeared on House of Lies, Married, Parks and Recreation, Hello Ladies, Kroll Show and Girls. As a voice-over actor, she has had roles in The Lorax, Zootopia, The LEGO Batman Movie and Despicable Me 3. She lives in Los Angeles.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Out of your three co-stars in Hotel Artemis—Jodie Foster, Zachary Quinto and Jeff Goldblum—who would you most like to do a love scene with?

JENNY SLATE: Oh, my gosh. Why can't I have them all? Aren't we in the modern world? I'd want each to do something different, like one to be the main kisser, and somebody to be the main catcher, and the other to be the one taking the initiative, but those are private fantasies that I'm not going to tell everyone in my hometown. [Laughs.]

Big Mouth*—are you one? I'm not a big mouth in terms of being a gossip, but I'm definitely a chatterbox. It's something I say lovingly about myself, although I've often been told that I don't have a fully functioning filter. I'm not careless or reckless, though.

Thing you miss most about Milton or Boston or New England in general? That smell in restaurants that even though there's not a smoking section anymore, you can still smell the cigarette smoke mingled with the bacon smell, which creates this incredible aroma that actually gets my appetite going in a way that is disgusting. I love the smell of bacon, but when mixed with cigarette smoke, I'm going to eat everything in the restaurant, including the people and the table. I miss that and the accent. I love them so much.

Saturday Night Live*—world's biggest pressure cooker? I don't know. I think it would be really scary to be one of those people on CNN who has to say what's happening as it's happening—and sound smart. SNL was so many years ago for me that sometimes I don't want to talk about it anymore.

I saw Gifted and loved it. Do you prefer doing drama or comedy? I kind of prefer drama, just because it's showing that part of yourself that you know is there, but you just haven't had the chance to show people. It's an opportunity to do something that you feel is very natural to you but has been hidden for so long. I just love it.

Ever had any weird tabloid or online gossip moments? I don't know. I try very hard to avoid looking at that kind of stuff because it's always either totally incorrect or oversimplified in such a way that you feel like someone's magnified one teeny-tiny part of your life and that never feels good. But one time I read that my stand-up was gross, and I actually found that the funniest thing in the world. First of all, as if that was some kind of discovery, as if I haven't been going on stage since 2005 and talking about my pussy. And second, it's not as if I'm going to get up there and say, "Well, as I was correctly doing my taxes last week at my synagogue, which I go to every Saturday..." I'm on stage talking about personal things, and I thought it was hilarious that anyone thought it was gross. I'm sharing my feelings up there. It's not like I'm taking a shit in my hand and saying, "Smell this!"

"It's an opportunity to do something that you feel is very natural to you but has been hidden for so long. I just love it."

Why are Bostonians funnier than everyone else? I think it's their vernacular. It's how emphatic Bostonians are. Even my mom, who is a very lovely woman, when she's in a rush, says, "I'm just gonna bomb in and bomb out." There's this very muscular, urgent way that Bostonians speak, and I find it to be hilarious, often unnecessary and incredibly attractive. It's like Bostonians are always throwing fastballs.

Are farts intrinsically funny? Yes. But sometimes when you are on the receiving end, it can be devastating, but it's always funny later. For example, I was on an airplane the other day and there was a woman sitting next to me, and she farted for like five hours straight. In the moment, it was infuriating and disgusting, but in retrospect, it's very funny that a woman can fart for five hours straight and not just float up into the air. If you have five hours worth of farts in you, why don't you keep them there and turn yourself into a bubble?

Hardest impression you ever had to do? Last week, when I stole my sister's identity, and her bank account is now mine. But it's difficult because I feel like I'm lying to my family. But I'm like, "You know what? This is for me. This is for me."

Favorite voice-over experience? That would have to be Marcel the Shell. It's my favorite thing in the world. But I love Big Mouth, the show that I'm on that's written by Nick Kroll and Andrew Goldberg. It's so funny, and it's really embarrassing. There's a lot of teens masturbating. They'll be like, "So Jenny, this is the scene where your character's humping her Gloworm. Can we just have a few gentle grunts from you?" This is my job. I have to visualize being a 14-year-old biracial girl humping a Gloworm.

How much weed went into making Marcel the Shell? People always ask that, but it was not a weed experience, actually. My ex-husband, who I did that with, doesn't smoke weed. So that was actually just because that's how my brain is. No weed at all involved. But feel free to smoke as much as you want while watching it.

When you did Drunk History, how wasted did you actually get? There was a lot of throwing up. I don't think I can do it again. Every time I've done it, I've thrown up so much. And that's saying a lot about what I'm like. I am really drunk, but I think I keep it together much more than other people do. Not to congratulate myself for being good at hiding how drunk I am, but that's a skill I've developed doing stand-up. When I first started, I'd have a few drinks to get my confidence going. Now I'm scarily good at hiding how wasted I am.

Person you get mistaken for? John Candy. All the time.

Top three reasons I should see Landline? It's really funny. It's a little bit sad, which I think is OK to feel, and I look a lot like Elaine Benes from Seinfeld, and who doesn't love that?

Do you have a potty mouth? No. I'd say I have a very good vocabulary. ◆

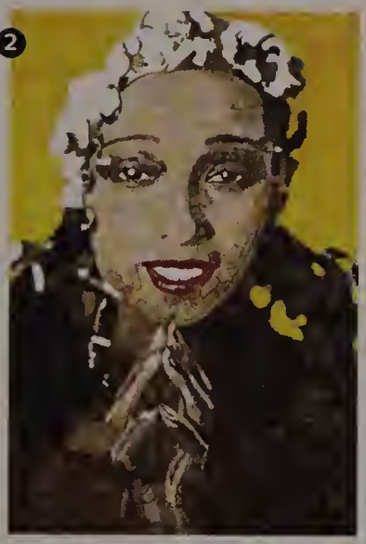
Naturally Curious

With Mark Dion: Misadventures of a 21st-Century Naturalist, the Institute of Contemporary Art debuts the first major U.S. retrospective of the New Bedford-born artist. Associate curator Ruth Erickson delves into Dion's three-decade career in this three-years-in-the-making survey, which brings together hundreds of objects from plant specimens and ocean flotsam to books, seeds and even live birds. Ahead of the installation's Oct. 4 opening, Erickson gave us a sneak peek.

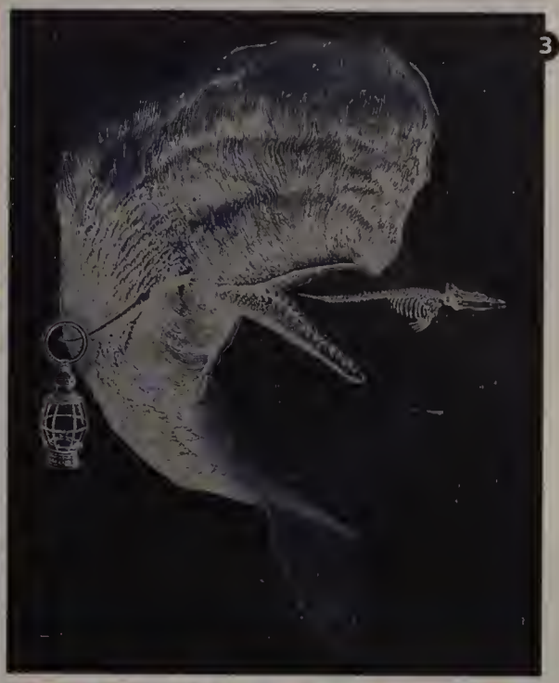
WHAT ARE THE DETAILS BEHIND THE ICA'S NEW COMMISSION? The Time Chamber is sort of like a retrospective within a retrospective. It gathers together Mark's journals, sketchbooks, many of his preliminary drawings for projects, some of which you see on view in other galleries and some of which are in Norway or Seattle or Hong Kong. It really is a space that explores what is Mark Dion's process, and at the same time looks at the production of small sculptures and prints and drawings that are really the material and the ephemera through which he works out his ideas. Recently he described the space to me like opening up his skull and peering in it at his process.

HOW DO YOU THINK GROWING UP IN FAIRHAVEN AND NEW BEDFORD INFORMS MARK'S WORK? The first thing he always talks about from his youth is his exploring of the marshes and the really rich natural life that is part of Buzzards Bay, just spending hours and hours as a child tromping through and discovering things. And he still does that to this day; I was out there with him in August doing the exact same thing he did as a little boy. The other side of that has been the history of the whaling and marine industries, and really thinking about how people historically used the natural world and its resources for profit, for beauty, for inspiration for making artwork. The New Bedford Whaling Museum was the first museum that Mark ever visited as a child, and it's a place he knows really well—a museum that is about cultural history basically.

HOW IMPORTANT WAS THE INCLUSION OF HIS LIBRARY FOR THE BIRDS SERIES, WHICH WILL BRING LIVE ANIMALS INTO THE MUSEUM? I think it was actually the first piece I ever saw personally of Mark Dion's work. It was included in an exhibition called Becoming Animal at Mass MoCA and it was totally mesmerizing and it just transported me to a different space. I remember entering the cage with the birds, just sitting there looking up as they were communing among binoculars and rifles and books about ornithology and just being totally transfixed with the ingenuity and the humor and the kind of moment of pause that it gave me in a really hectic world. And so when I first started working on this show three years ago, it was the very first piece that I knew we had to bring here because I can't imagine a Mark Dion survey without one.



WHAT HAS IT BEEN LIKE WORKING WITH HIM? I would say working with Mark, you're on a constant adventure with him and he's always opening your eyes to parts of the world that you maybe hadn't paid attention to before. For me, he's really opened up my eyes in thinking about what constitutes the realm of nature and the environment. Before working on this project, I felt like I could very clearly kind of bracket off, "OK, this is part of nature and this is part of human culture." Mark has shown me just how complicated and intertwined those two realms are. This weekend I was hiking out at Blue Hills with my son, and I pointed to an animal and I used a certain gender pronoun. There, you're thinking about, well, how are animals personified and anthropomorphized? And what are the kinds of ideas inherent in our talking about the natural world that really reflect as much on human culture as they do on what exists in nature? It has really been eye opening to have such a more nuanced sense of nature and thinking about what's facing us with environmental changes that are going on and to really think about these things from so many different angles, like the language we use, the images we use to represent the natural world, the relationships of hierarchy that we set up between humans and animals and nature. And I think that those hierarchies run really deep; they're throughout science, throughout biology, throughout religion. To start unpacking and questioning some of those assumed hierarchies has been really revelatory for me as a person, in addition to as a curator. I should also say that I think the show's going to be really fun. There are lots of interactive pieces; there's a lot of humor in it as you're also addressing questions about the environment, which can be really heavy. What I love about his work is that it sort of does both things—it's fun and it's serious at the same time.



WHAT'S ONE PIECE VISITORS SHOULD LOOK OUT FOR? The Wildlife Rescue Unit, which is a giant yellow truck. It's this imagined outfit of botanists that will be going into areas that are about to be developed and saving plants that are endangered or threatened and rescuing them by relocating them to natural and protected habitats. It's a piece that Mark actually made based upon a group of botanists he met in South Florida who were doing just that, and then he thought, "OK, well I'm going to make you all the very best truck you could imagine."

NUMBERS GAME

3,000 estimated rusted hinges make up Peabody Essex Museum's recent acquisition, Immanence, on display through Oct. 22. Havana-based artist Yoan Capote sourced hinges during his frequent travels abroad, later convincing his Cuban neighbors to swap the new hinges for their old hinges, which he then used to weld this 10-foot Fidel Castro sculpture that addresses the impact of the U.S. trade embargo.

LOOK SHARP

Peer deeper into these must-see visual arts exhibits on display this fall.

1. The South End's A R E A Gallery debuts a second space in Cambridge with inaugural exhibit Please interrupt if you don't understand. On view through Oct. 14, it's the first solo show from Boston University– and Tufts-bred artist Gabriel Sosa, who taps into his background as a court interpreter with drawings and videos that incorporate legal text and recordings of a deportation warning delivered at the opening of trials, plus a floor-to-ceiling installation of correspondence between defendants and their loved ones.

2. Through Oct. 27, UMass Boston presents Richard Yarde: Portraits, the first solo exhibition to look at the longtime professor's work in five years. Filling University Hall Gallery, the watercolorist's large-scale paintings include images of African-American cultural icons such as Josephine Baker and also look at everyday people, including 1996 diptych Bock with Dots for which the Roxbury native examined his own X-rays taken after experiencing kidney failure.

3. The oldest photography gallery in the city sails into a new chapter with At Sea, Panopticon's first show under a new director and owner since temporarily closing its Hotel Commonwealth doors in April. On display through Oct. 31, the maritime-themed exhibit highlights nine artists, many bringing elements such as painting and historical techniques into their images, including Andrew Seguin. The poet and photographer combines a 19th-century blueprint process with modern-day Photoshop to create digital negatives incorporating texts and illustrations from Moby-Dick.

4. After her 2013 Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum residency, Bharti Kher covered the Anne H. Fitzpatrick Façade in 2015 with her bindi-speckled installation Not All Who Wonder Are Lost, tracing migration routes using a Jean Chardonnet historical atlas. Now Kher returns for a third time from Sept. 20 to Sept. 6, 2018, in the Fenway Gallery, as the serial diarist debuts notebooks and a series of drawings inspired by her time living among the collection that meditate on gender, anatomy, pregnancy and motherhood.

5. Photojournalist Karim Ben Khelifa spent 18 years documenting war frontlines. Beginning on Oct. 5, the Belgian-Tunisian artist brings MIT Museum visitors to the same combat zones with his virtual-reality installation The Enemy. Donning headsets and backpacks, civilians come face-to-face with real individuals involved in conflicts in El Salvador, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Israel and Palestine, as they reveal their personal decisions to bear arms and wax on what freedom means to them—confessions Khelifa and a team of producers unearthed during trips to four continents. And this North American premiere (running through Dec. 31) comes with a new twist. Guests answer a questionnaire, developed during a residency at MIT's Center for Art, Science & Technology alongside professor D. Fox Harrell, that determines a personalized experience.

6. The Museum of Fine Arts houses one of the world's largest collections of Japanese art, and on Oct. 18–April 1, it'll add more than a dozen pieces with Takashi Murakami: Lineage of Eccentrics. The acclaimed artist has mounted a retrospective in Versailles, designed album cover art for one of the Palace's modern-day frequenters, Kanye West, and now, with art professor Nobuo Tsuji, Murakami will pair his designs alongside work from the MFA's archive, like 18th-century painter Soga Shohaku's 35-foot-long Dragon and Clouds and his own take on the masterpiece from 2010

STEP INTO IT

Drag your feet to these five must-see dance shows this fall.

José Mateo dips into his extensive repertoire to kick off the season with Assault on the Senses on Oct. 6-29 at the Sanctuary Theatre. This collection of three original works includes Isle of the Dead, Covens and Fearless Symmetries—all showcasing Mateo's trademark minimalist style

Stage and screen star Maurice Hines brings his happy feet to the Cabot on Oct. 27 to perform Tappin' Thru Life. The talented tapper has been shuffling alongside big names since the start of his career at age 5. Catch his fine footwork with the Manzari Brothers and Sherrie Maricle & the Diva Jazz Orchestra.

From Oprah to Ellen, and now the Boch Shubert Theatre, avant-garde dance troupe Pilobolus takes the stage with a multimedia performance on Oct. 27-29 Presented by Celebrity Series, the program includes The Inconsistent Pedaler, an acrobatic/lyrical collective work between Pilobolus, novelist Etgar Keret and filmmaker Shira Geffen that tells the story of a girl with a bicycle that controls time.

Former ballerina and Boston-based choreographer Anna Myer takes her nine-member company to the ICA on Nov. 10-11. For this World Music/ CRASHarts world premiere that explores human relationships and cultural differences, Myer melds modern and hip-hop dance, setting it to a range of music performed by a violist and a DJ

Classical pianist Simone Dinnerstein and choreographer Pam Tanowitz unite in the name of Bach to produce New Work for Goldberg Variations on Dec. 8-10 at the ICA While giving a nod to the 1971 ballet by Jerome Robbins set to the same music, the piece aims to translate the nuances of the score into movement

Obsidian Tear

To The Pointe

Jorma Elo, Boston Ballet's resident choreographer, returns to the stage with a world premiere inspired by the Finnish composer Jean Sibelius' Fifth Symphony. The 35-minute ensemble piece will feature simple costumes and set elements as well as lighting designed to replicate the four seasons in Finland. We caught up with Elo before his piece chasses to the Boston Opera House alongside Obsidian Tear on Nov. 3-12.

WHAT WAS THE CHOREOGRAPHIC PROCESS FOR THIS PIECE? [The dancers] know me well, and we create a lot of the movements together in the studio. I have structures of different groups and I plan ahead, but a lot of the material is kind of being made in the moment here in the studio and will in the end fit the music perfectly.

THIS PIECE USES ALL FINNISH COMPOSERS; HOW WAS IT CREATING A PIECE THAT PAYS TRIBUTE TO YOUR HERITAGE? You're used to the music that you heard as a child in your surroundings so much, but here I am in Boston presenting this music to the dancers who have never heard it. So that collaboration of somebody knowing the music really well and somebody being introduced to it for the first time when we start working in the studio, I think it's an interesting clash of our minds connected to the music. I think there's beauty in it.

WHAT DO YOU HOPE THE AUDIENCE WILL LEARN FROM THE PERFORMANCE? I actually don't think of the audience very much in the creative process; it's not the starting point for me. I want to go deep into the world of the music and then go even deeper with the dancers with my ideas and their ideas. And then I think if those ideas are really rich and we create a world that is fascinating for us, we'll take the audience into our magical journey that we have built for them and that intimate thought process that we have had with our dancers to take that journey will blow the audience away.

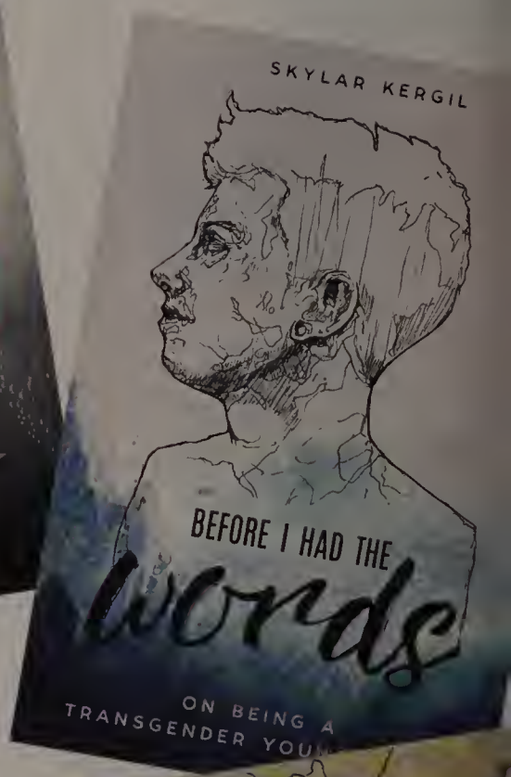
DURING YOUR CHILDHOOD YOU WANTED TO BE AN ICE HOCKEY PLAYER. WHAT GOT YOU INTERESTED IN BECOMING A CHOREOGRAPHER? Yes, in Finland the winters were long. ... Ice hockey was a big way to spend our youth and it was my first love for movement, so I did everything to be the best mover I could become. My sisters were in dance classes so I thought, "Hey, that would make me a better ice hockey play if I go to a dance class." ... When I went to the dance class, there was music playing, so the dance class gave me a similar kind of physicality ... but it was connected to the music. So that kind of took me over and I wanted to become a dancer... I transitioned from dancing to being a choreographer.

NUMBERS GAME

16 square feet of stage space is available to choreographers for Tiny and Short. A Drop in the Bucket, coming to the Dance Complex on Oct. 13-15. And the performance series also challenges choreographers to create a piece crunched for time—dancers have only three minutes on stage.

Burning Bright

With a career that extends more than two decades, Cambridge resident Claire Messud is no stranger to crafting expert fiction. Ahead of her appearance on Oct. 28 at the Boston Book Festival, the best-selling novelist chatted about female authors, creative Bostonians and her latest work, The Burning Girl—an intimate portrait of adolescent friendship.



WHAT WAS THE INITIAL INSPIRATION BEHIND THE BURNING GIRL? One was an experience from long ago—not my own experience but someone else's that I knew—that had haunted me for a long time. So that has been in the back of my mind for many years. And then I think more immediately it was happening that [my] kids were going through the experiences of adolescence, and standing on the sidelines watching that brings back all your own memories as well as giving you new experiences.

YOU OFTEN DIVE DEEP INTO WHAT IT MEANS TO BE A WOMAN IN YOUR WORK. ARE THERE ANY FEMALE WRITERS WHO HAVE INFLUENCED YOU? Hundreds! From Jane Austen to Virginia Woolf to Alice Munro to many people in between. I think when I was growing up, I read what my mother put in front of me. There wasn't [young adult] then, and as a teenager I read a lot of books by 20th-century women writers.

DO YOU USUALLY HAVE AN OUTLINE OF WHERE A NOVEL IS GOING TO GO WHEN YOU BEGIN WRITING? I always know where the story's going to go, but discovery is really important to the process. So even though I have an outline, it's always an adventure about finding new things as I go along. There's a wonderful and now very famous [E.L.] Doctorow quote saying that writing is like driving on a country road at night and you know what your destination is but all you can see is what's in the headlights. I've always felt that pretty well sums it up.

HOW HAS LIVING IN THE BOSTON AREA INFLUENCED YOUR WORK? There are so many amazing creative people, both writers and academics and the creative visual artists and musicians. So, it's a really exciting and inspiring place to be. And there's also the landscape and the communities. ... Both my last novel and this novel are set in the Boston area—this one, about an hour north of here. So if I lived somewhere else, that wouldn't be so.

JOKING AROUND

Jen Kirkman was a longtime writer and guest on Chelsea Lately before she filmed two Netflix specials, became a New York Times best-selling author and launched her own necklace line. The Needham native and Emerson alum chatted with us before she takes her All New Material, Girl tour to the Wilbur on Sept. 20. / Emily Turner

AS A COMIC WHO WENT TO SCHOOL AT EMERSON, CAN YOU DESCRIBE WHAT IT FEELS LIKE TO BE COMING BACK TO BOSTON? I went there in the olden days. In the early '90s, they did not have any such universe where you could learn anything about stand-up. It was Shakespearean acting or acting, and that was it. So I was a theater major and studied acting. My senior year I asked the then dean, "You know, I really want to get into stand-up comedy. How can I do it?" He goes, "You're too old." I was 21. He goes, "All the greats start at 18 like Richard Pryor." I don't even know if that's true about Richard Pryor. And he goes, "You have to live in New York and you don't have what it takes to live there." That's literally what he said to me ... But there were also so many great teachers that were wonderful to me ... so it's so triumphant for me to come back and perform.

DO YOU HAVE ANY FOND MEMORIES OF THE WILBUR? I've never done the Wilbur by myself. I've only done it in groups of other people, so I've never had all the sales be my responsibility, which I'm really excited about. I mean, I get all the glory. I'm sold! I used to work at the Boston Ballet and I used to work at a company called Broadway in Boston. I sold tickets to every show all over Boston for forever so I'm really familiar with this theater. It's really exciting to get to be one of the acts in it now.

WHAT ABOUT PERFORMING FOR YOUR HOMETOWN? You know how Boston is. They're not going to—well, I could be wrong, maybe this time it will be different because it's such a big theater—but Boston people are Boston people and they like to keep you in check. So there's no extra adulation. It's just like, "We're here. We're laughing." But if I'm like, "Hey it's my hometown!" They don't fall for that. They don't care.

DO YOU CATER YOUR MATERIAL FOR A HOMETOWN AUDIENCE? No ... but there will be some talk of a visit to the Plimouth Plantation I had when I was a kid—the site of my first anxiety attack. [Laughs.] And then my parents and me, you know, growing up. And me being afraid of MIT because someone told me that's where they keep nuclear bombs.

WHAT SHOULD THE BOSTON AUDIENCE ANTICIPATE FROM YOUR TOUR? Well, seeing as Boston basically kicked the Nazis asses, I feel like ... this is a revolutionary liberal state; I think they'll love it. My act isn't really political, it's more personal, but of course I talk about the fact that I was unhappy with who America chose on election night. It's not about that, but it's about what I did to soothe myself and I go into a whole crazy thing about how I put up the Christmas tree and I watched a Hallmark movie instead. [Laughs.] Sometimes you just have to act dumb like you don't know what's going on just to get through like one night.

LISTEN UP!

Show up and tune into this eclectic mix of must-see concerts hitting the stage this season.

Emmanuel Music pays tribute to the poetry of Allen Ginsberg with two-late night performances of Howl! on Sept. 23 in Emmanuel Church's Parish Hall. Performed by the Arneis Quartet, the evening's titular work gets into the Beat Generation founding father's stay at a psychiatric institution with friend Carl Solomon and also includes Ginsberg's "A Supermarket in California," which imagines a conversation with Walt Whitman. Meanwhile, principal guest conductor John Harbison also debuts *Schwortz*songs, three pieces written in the past three years to mimic the reading voice of Fresh Air classical music critic and UMass Boston professor Lloyd Schwartz.

The Boston Pops have played alfresco in Franklin Park twice before—with Arthur Fiedler in 1968 and again in 2000—but it'll be a first when the Boston Symphony Orchestra joins on Oct. 1 for a free outdoor concert at the Playstead. Andris Nelsons is on hand to conduct the fourth movement of Mahler's Symphony No. 1, with Keith Lockhart leading John Williams' favorites such as the Main Theme from Stor Wors and Hedwig's Theme from Horry Potter ond the Sorcerer's Stone, but not before a pre-concert festival filled with art exhibits, crafts and musical demonstrations.

Jazz greats Jack DeJohnette, John Scofield, John Medeski and Larry Grenadier joined forces for a 2014 Woodstock Jazz Festival gig, but the musicians had crossed paths before while working with legends like Miles Davis and Keith Jarrett. Now the Hudson Valley residents are touring a just-released album that taps into the background of their new hometown. In addition to original tracks, the master improvisers bring a jazz twist to Bob Dylan, Jimi Hendrix Experience and other classic rock hits, including Joni Mitchell's 1970 anthem "Woodstock." Hudson's Celebrity Series appearance hits Berklee Performance Center on Oct. 8.

Songwriters and authors come together for the Earfull series, established in 2001 by owners of Q Division Studios, Newtonville Books and Kendall Cafe with past guests such as the Dropkick Murphys and Dennis Lehane bringing down the house. The recently revived fall edition includes three dates at Mosesian Center for the Arts' Black Box Theater, including Oct. 17, when 100 Doys of Coke novelist Shari Goldhagen and Marblehead native and National Book Award recipient Julia Glass team up with Ron Sexsmith touring partner Kim Taylor and Americana up-and-comer Julie Rhodes.

T-Pain fell in love with his stripped-down NPR Tiny Desk Concert in 2014 and then showed off his synth-free chops when he opened a Dodgers game with the national anthem. Now the chart-topping rapper is taking his unplugged show on the road to just six cities, including Cambridge. For his Acoustic Tour's Oct. 25 stop at the Sinclair, expect greatest hits like "Buy U a Drank" and "I'm Sprung"—minus the Auto-tune.

John Carpenter revisits some of his greatest film scores from Holloween, Escape From New York and other cult classics in his October release, Anthology: Movie Themes, 1974-1998. The creepy chorus comes alive on Nov. 15 at Royale, when the legendary director and composer is joined by his son Cody Carpenter and godson Daniel Davies—whose father, Kinks guitarist Dave Davies, played the lead for Carpenter's In the Mouth of Modness theme more than two decades ago.

Matter of Records

In 1930s Berlin, bookstore owner Hirseh Lewin started his Semer reeord label in response to a ban on Jewish musieians performing in Nazi Germany. But when synagogues and businesses were destroyed during Kristallnacht, so were the label's arrangements and reeords. That is, until the '90s when musieologist Rainer Lots spent nearly a deeade traeking down more than 250 reeordings from the eatalog. Led by Alan Bern, the Semer Projeet brings those cabaret hits, Italian arias and German folk and klezmer songs to life, and the Jewish Arts Collaborative brings the ensemble of contemporary Jewish musieians to Tufts University's Granoff Musie Center on Nov. 14.

WHAT WAS THE MUSIC SCENE LIKE WHEN HIRSCH LEWIN FOUNDED HIS RECORD LABEL? Wcll, if you've ever seen a film about Berlin in the 1920s, you know that everything in the world was happening here. There was high art; there was cabaret; many of the world's most major composers were living here at that point. There was a very vital opera scene; there were several orchestras; there were musical theaters. There was a very vital Yiddish culture scene here. So there was everything under the sun that you can imagine. And it was partly because it was so colorful that the Nazis shut down the parts of what they thought were degeneratc. If we look at the moment when Lewin starts making these recordings, in 1932 before Hitler came to power and until 1938 when Kristallnacht happens, what we're seeing is the echo of this colorful scene from the 1920s that really had probably no precedent in Western Europe.

HOW INCREDIBLE IS THE NEARLY 10-YEAR SEARCH THAT MUSICOLOGIST RAINER LOTS WENT ON TO FIND THE SURVIVING RECORDINGS? Amazing. Amazing. And especially when you think of the fact that one record in those days weighed a few pounds. They were made of shellac; they're extremely fragile. And the thought that people took those records with them when they were fleeing Nazi Germany is just in itself incredible, and that any of those records survived any of that journey.

CAN YOU DESCRIBE ONE SONG YOU'LL PERFORM THAT RESONATES WITH YOU? One of them is called "Vorbei," which means it's over. It was sung by a young actress named Dora Gerson. It's the ending of a love relationship song. You know, it's "I thought it would last forever and then all of a sudden you say goodbye to me and how is it possible that it's over." But of course, knowing that she sings this song in the 1930s and that a few years later she was arrested and sent to Auschwitz with her family and killed there gives the whole song a poignancy and historical weight that your normal love song doesn't have.

THERE'S A LOT OF LAYERS TO THIS: MUSICIANS CREATING THEIR MUSIC, LEWIN STARTING HIS LABEL, LOTS TRACKING DOWN THE RECORDINGS, AND NOW YOU INTERPRETING IT ALL FOR A MODERN-DAY AUDIENCE. HOW DID IT ALL COME ABOUT? I feel very lucky that this project kind of fell in my lap. One of the singers in the ensemble, Fabian Schnedler, works at the Jewish Museum and he's been a student of mine. So when the Jewish Museum decided that they wanted to do an exhibition about this period of time—the late '20s and early '30s—they ran across these recordings and Fabian said to them: "Look, you can have these recordings sitting in a dark room with little MP3 recordings of it that people can listen to when they put on headphones. Or you can have somebody create a live program with musicians who are living today in Berlin, and audiences can hear and feel what this music would have sounded like 70 years ago when young people were doing it." In fact, the director of the Jewish Museum was sitting in the audience and after the concert she came up and said, "I agreed to put on this concert because I thought I should, you know, morally, or something like that, but I didn't think I was going to like the music. But I loved so much what you did, and it feels to me like you are all playing this music because you really love it and you live it." And that was the greatest thing to hear because we don't want this to be a museum piece. We want audiences to hear us and to understand that this is real music made by real people and not to think of it as from that time and place only, but to also see it as relating to the present as well.

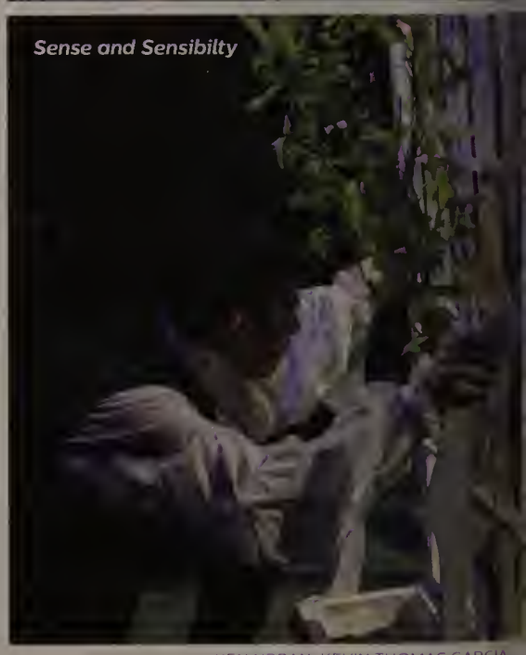
YOU'VE STUDIED AND HAVE AN INTEREST IN POP, JAZZ AND CLASSICAL. WHAT DRAWS YOU TO YIDDISH MUSIC? We tend to look back at Yiddish culture and think of it in terms of nostalgia, but it was a booming, very edgy culture in the beginning of thc 20th century with connections to very deep folk traditions as well. And I would say that the edginess of Yiddish culture, as well as the deeper levels of Yiddish culture, all sort of got sugarcoated in a kind of a nostalgic picture of what it was. And that was an injustice to the millions and millions of people who lived that culture. I also think that Yiddish culture is not unique in this, but it was not only the six million Jews and dozens of other millions of people who were lost because of the war, but it was all of the social and cultural impulses that were coming from them and that would have continued if they had been able to continue to live.

NUMBERS GAME

57 orchestra members will take the Boch Wang Theatre stage alongside a 20-person choir on Oct. 21 for The Legend of Zelda—Symphony of the Goddesses. The two-hour concert—which includes a video collage that plays out a few of the game's scenes—recreates Nintendo composer Koji Kondo's original music, from the soundtrack of Link settling on his colored tunic to slaying dragons and racing through the forest.

Class Act

Playwright Ken Urban says he felt the Boston area calling him home from New York after a one-two punch. He was offered a job as the new head of the playwriting track at MIT's music and theater arts department this fall, and he reached a deal to premiere his A Guide for the Homesick with the Huntington Theatre Company at the BCA's Calderwood Pavilion on Oct. 6-Nov. 4. Urban expounded on what he's expecting from both of his gigs.



WHAT WAS MOST EXCITING ABOUT THE OPPORTUNITY AT MIT? I don't think I realized that MIT had a theater company for a while, and certainly theater is not the first thing you think of when you think of MIT. But it's actually been a really growing department, and after our engineering classes, it's been the most popular classes at MIT. Also, MIT just opened a brand-new building where there's a flexible black-box space, rehearsal spaces and I'll be teaching a playwriting class over there.

DO YOU HAVE A VISION OF HOW THE DEPARTMENT WILL GROW WHILE YOU'RE THERE? I think it's interesting to think about what theater is in the 21st century. One view is a very technological and very screen-oriented type of theater, like the type of work that Jay [Scheib] does. I tend to be a little more lo-tech as a playwright. I see myself as a sort of storyteller. I've started thinking about how you tell a story in the 21st century. There's no doubt that a lot of my students will be interested in writing about science or how you write about science. And there are very few good plays about science. Usually they're pretty bad. So, I'm trying to figure out how to write about science, and how our very sense of self has changed because of things like iPhone apps. All of that stuff I think is kind of interesting in how you can tell that story on stage. And maybe there are a lot of projections and lighting designs, or maybe it's done very simply—that's what we're sort of figuring out.

WHAT CAN THE AUDIENCE EXPECT FROM A GUIDE FOR THE HOMESICK? It's going to be a pretty emotional ride. I've been working on this play for a while. I've done interviews with folks who worked with Doctors Without Borders. And I was really interested in the process of homecoming and what it means to come home after you've had a really traumatic experience. I knew Colman Domingo as an actor. He had seen one of my previous plays in New York, and we had been looking for a way to work together. He's an amazing director as well, so it worked out that he was free of his shooting schedule on Fear the Walking Dead this fall. Everything perfectly aligned for us to work on this play together. It's about two friends who meet in a hotel bar in Amsterdam and what happens when they spend the night together. It's kind of erotic, and it's about how we process grief. I think a lot of us in this country are currently experiencing a lot of grief on a daily basis.

SPY THE STAGE

Grab a seat at these 10 must-see productions that will be in the limelight this fall season.

It's more than just the old boy-meets-girl plot in Constellations, a collaboration between Central Square Theater and MIT that runs through Oct. 8 in Cambridge. Scott Edmiston directs the two-hander, which premiered in London in 2012 and uses a quantum physics set-up to explore all the what-ifs of a relationship.

Dusting off Tony Kushner's A Bright Room Called Day, the Flat Earth Theatre provides a window into 1932 Germany. Dori Robinson directs the tale of a group of bohemian friends who watch their world crumble during the rise of Adolf Hitler, staged at the Mosesian Center for the Arts on Sept. 30-Oct. 14

Acting powerhouses Johnny Lee Davenport and Obehi Janice star in New Rep Theatre's Oleanna, running Oct. 14-Nov. 5 at the Mosesian Center for the Arts The two-hander written by David Mamet pits Janice as a college student who accuses Davenport, a professor, of misconduct that jeopardizes his future.

Fun Home broke ground as the first Broadway musical with a lesbian protagonist, and the production based on Alison Bechdel's graphic memoir was granted the touring treatment after it won five Tonys during its run. The show, which focuses on Alison's discovery of her own sexuality and her father's hidden life, stops at the Boston Opera House on Oct. 17-29

Paul Daigneault and SpeakEasy Stage turn to Simon Stephens' adaptation of The Curious Incident of the Dog in the Night-Time for a production on Oct. 20-Nov. 18. The play stars Eliott Purcel as the 15-year-old Christopher Boone who sets out to solve a neighborhood crime.

ArtsEmerson imports Kiss from Chilean writer/director Guillermo Calderón for an Oct. 26-Nov. 19 run at the Emerson Paramount Center. The play tells the story of a foreign troupe that performs what it thinks is a Syrian soap opera only to find out there's a misunderstanding that could have fatal consequences.

The off-kilter story of the 19th-century murdering spree of William Burke and William Hare has been adapted in different forms through the years, but Boston Lyric Opera stages the world premiere of the opera this fall. Mr. Burke & Mr. Hare runs Nov. 8-12 at the BCA's Cyclorama and showcases music from composer Julian Grant and librettist Mark Campbell.

Bertolt Brecht's Fear and Misery in the Third Reich premiered in 1938, and still resonates today, which is why Commonwealth Shakespeare Company is staging a reading on Nov. 13 at Babson College's Carling Sorenson Theater Brooke Adams and Tony Shalhoub (who teamed up in Monk) deliver the script, which connects 18 playlets to tell the story of ordinary people in 1930s Germany during the rise of Nazism.

The revival of The Color Purple won two Tonys during its run on Broadway, and the show hits the Boch Shubert Theatre on Nov. 21-Dec. 3 during its continental tour. The coming-of-age story about Celie is directed by Tony-winner John Doyle and won a Grammy for its theater album.

Get ready to roll when Bedlam Theater Company's production of Sense and Sensibility slides into A.R.T.'s Loeb Drama Center on Dec. 10-Jan. 14 It's one of Jane Austen's classics reinvented, with the set elements moving on wheels to give the audience more viewpoints of the action.

AGENDA

Wide Shot

A 70mm film festival goes big

When Christopher Nolan shot Dunkirk, he used 70mm film, eschewing today's go-to digital style. And he's not alone: Film auteurs from Quentin Tarantino to P.T. Anderson have released films on 70mm film this decade. Somerville Theatre is feting the old-fashioned format with its second annual 70mm and Widescreen Festival, which will pack 17 screenings into 12 days in its main theater. Catch what's considered a better cinematic experience—in sharpness and richness of color—than 4k digital when the theater screens classics from the past 60 years such as Cleopatra, Lawrence of Arabia (right) and Top Gun. Keep your eyes wide open and enjoy the nearly two weeks of screenings at the Somerville Theatre starting Sept. 20. / Matt Martinelli

The 70mm and Widescreen Festival runs Sept. 20–Oct. 1 at the Somerville Theatre, 55 Davis Square, Somerville. $15, $12 seniors, $10–$12 matinees. somervilletheatre.com

SHOWTIME!

If it's September in Boston, it must be Sondheim Season—at least when it comes to the Lyric Stage and Huntington Theatre companies. As part of its years-long Sondheim Cycle, the Huntington welcomes director Maria Friedman's London revival of Merrily We Roll Along, which won an Olivier Award after its 2012 premiere. Meanwhile, the Lyric Stage taps director/choreographer Rachel Bertone for its staging of Gypsy (pictured). The 1959 musical was nominated for eight Tony Awards when it debuted, telling the story of the titular burlesque dancer and her controlling stage mother, Mama Rose. Double-dip with Sondheim at Lyric Stage through Oct. 8 and at the Huntington through Oct. 15. / Matt Martinelli

GOLDEN GIRLS

Love, loss and lots of dancing unfold in a glittering Brussels shopping mall in Chantal Akerman's 1986 musical Golden Eighties. Starry-eyed shampoo girls vie for the affection of a nearby boutique owners' heartthrob son, all while tangled in a web of resurfacing lovers and shameless two-timing. Starring Delphine Seyrig, this ensemble narrative parallels romantic strife with the political crisis of a nation recovering from war and Holocaust, yet juxtaposes the serious past with girlish vibrancy. See how the threads connect on Sept. 23 as part of the Breathing Through Cinema series at the Harvard Film Archive. / Cathryn Haight

Reviews by Brett Michel

American Assassin ★1/2 Late author Vince Flynn's fictional counter-terrorism operative Mitch Rapp finally makes it to the big screen in director Michael Cuesta's attempt to kick-start an action franchise, but the CIA Black Ops recruit barely makes it out of training because of a misguided, overreaching script that's clearly had too many hands on it. A very loose adaptation of one of the final of 16 novels featuring Rapp, the character was originally intended to be in his mid-40s. But since the plot has been reconfigured as an origin story, The Maze Runner's Dylan O'Brien has slipped into the shoes of the now 20-something young hotshot, and Rapp's biographical details have been updated as well. The death of his girlfriend still gets the ball rolling, but high school sweetheart Maureen has transformed into Katrina (newcomer Charlotte Vega), and rather than a fictional victim of the real-life bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 in 1988, this movie's updated timeline finds her being gunned down in front of Rapp—just minutes after becoming his fiancee—during the gratuitous beach resort terrorist attack that opens the film. O'Brien makes little impact as the loose cannon, while Michael Keaton injects a welcome touch of class to the low-rent proceedings as Stan Hurley, Rapp's trainer and mentor. Adding to the budget-rate feel are some awful computer-generated effects that overtake the big-action climax at sea, most of which would even look out-of-place in one of today's hyper-realistic video games. It's an anonymously executed misfire. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Crown Heights ★★★ Despite never quite nailing a consistent point of view, writer/director Matt Ruskin's Sundance Audience Award-winning drama is nevertheless a good movie. But given its subject, it should have been great. The movie tells the real-life story of the systematic injustice perpetrated on Colin Warner (Get Out's Lakeith Stanfield), an 18-year-old Brooklyn man who spent more than 20 years behind bars after he was wrongfully convicted of murder. In the spring of 1980, the small-time car thief was arrested on what he presumed would be a grand theft auto charge, but it didn't take long for the harsh reality of his situation to surface. It didn't matter that the frightened young teenage witness (Skylan Brooks from Netflix's The Get Down), who was coerced by police into randomly picking out Colin's picture from a book of mugshots, recanted his testimony while on the stand. Colin was sentenced to a term of 15 years to life, with an early release only possible if he demonstrated remorse for a crime he didn't commit. Rapidly skipping through the years, Ruskin shifts his focus onto Colin's childhood pal Carl "KC" King (former Oakland Raider Nnamdi Asomugha), who devoted his life to fighting for the release of his innocent friend, as well as Antoinette (Natalie Paul), Colin's childhood crush. With racial inequality in the spotlight, Ruskin's uneven film is a potent reminder of how much still needs to be done. (At Boston Common.)

Good Time ★★★★ Returning with their third triumph after 2009's Daddy Longlegs and 2014's Heaven Knows What, Boston University graduates Josh and Benny Safdie have created what's easily their most accessible film yet, a grungy little movie that manages to locate all of the grit and grime that used to be on display so gloriously in the New York-set cinema of the 1970s. Gorgeously shot on 35mm film by cinematographer Sean Price Williams, this uproariously funny crime drama also explicitly owes a debt to its forebear from a later decade, After Hours, Martin Scorsese's 1985 comic classic that, like this film, spans a single, fast-paced night on the mean streets of Manhattan. After involving his developmentally and hearing-disabled brother Nick (co-director Benny Safdie) in a botched bank robbery, Connie Nikas (a wonderful Robert Pattinson) embarks on a crazed overnight odyssey to spring Nick from jail. Along the way, he picks up a few unwitting accomplices, including sometime girlfriend Corey (Jennifer Jason Leigh), underaged Crystal (Taliah Lennice Webster in an incredibly assured, naturalistic debut) and recently released ex-con Ray (Heaven Knows What's Buddy Duress), all backed by a hypnotic electronic score by Wayland native Daniel Lopatin (also known as Oneohtrix Point Never). It's grubby good fun that packs an emotional wallop. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)
